Résumé	Le processus de reconnaissance du statut de réfugié au sens de la Convention de Genève, tel qu'il est énoncé dans la Loi sur l'immigration, sert à déterminer si les personnes qui revendiquent ce statut y ont effectivement droit et peuvent bénéficier de la protection accordée aux réfugiés au sens de la Convention. Ce processus s'est avéré inadéquat, tant au point de vue juridique que pratique. Dans ce bulletin, on examine les mécanismes en vigueur actuellement et le projet de réforme contenu dans la loi C-55 déposé en mai 1987.

INTRODUCTION

Microlog: Canadian Research Index puts all of Canada's hard-to-find government and research literature at your fingertips. This monthly indexing, abstracting and document delivery service covers all levels of government in Canada, as well as institutions receiving research grants. Most titles included in Microlog are available in either paper or microfiche format. Combined with a microfiche collection, the Microlog Service is a powerful tool for finding Canadian report publications. The unique Microlog Accession Number is the key to immediate retrieval of any document.

SCOPE

Among other documents, Microlog includes research papers in physical, natural and social sciences, policy papers, important statistics, and annual reports. Every effort is made to ensure the currency of the index. For instance, documents appearing in the Checklist of Canadian Government Publications are delivered by Microlog approximately two months after publication of the list.

LANGUAGE POLICY

Documents issued in English or French are indexed and abstracted in the language of publication, while bilingual documents are indexed and abstracted in both languages.

SOURCES AND COVERAGE

Federal Documents: The Microlog editors review all checklists issued by the Canadian Government Publishing Centre and order every document relevant to the service. Except for serials, maps, pamphlets, and manuals, all monographs covered by the Federal Depository Plan are included in the index. Also, a special effort is made to track down elusive but important titles which do not appear in the lists.

Microlog offers a special collection of documents published by the Federal Government but not issued through the Federal Depository Plan. These titles, available to subscribers as the Non-Depository Publications collection, are indicated in the Titles section by a bullet (●). Microlog is also the direct distributing agent for many government bodies.

Provincial Documents: Depository arrangements with several provincial libraries have been established to ensure that Microlog subscribers receive all publications from those provinces. Where no depository arrangement exists, all publications lists issued by the province are reviewed for acquisitions.

Municipal Documents: Since these titles are very difficult to obtain, the Microlog editors make special efforts to include publications from municipal sources.

ACCESS

The Index provides access by subject, corporate or individual author, and series title.

The full Microlog file from 1979 to date, consisting of almost 50,000 records, is available online through Can/OLE. This is an ideal way to locate hard-to-find reports which may then be ordered directly online through the Can/DOCS service. Contact: Can/OLE Client Services, CISTI, Ottawa, Ontario, K1A 0S2.

FEATURES

Microlog comprises the following sections:

1. Titles and abstracts: A full bibliographic citation and a descriptive abstract for each title.
2. Name Index: Access by personal author, corporate author, and conference name.
3. Series Titles: Lists by title and number all reports in series in the service; series are available as an ongoing subscription or retrospective collection.
4. Subject Index: Descriptors based on Library of Congress and Canadiana Subject Headings are assigned to each document. A cross-referencing structure assists searchers.
5. Microfiche collections: Lists contents of each fiche collection for quick reference. These collections can be used as current awareness lists in broad subject areas to notify users of new acquisitions. This section is included in the annual cumulation as a separate fiched product.

MICROLOG AND CANADIAN STATISTICS INDEX

Statistical Material: The Canadian Statistics Index (CSI) provides further access to statistical material contained in Microlog monographs and special or annual reports. The CSI identification number has been included with the Microlog citation for the convenience of subscribers to the CSI fiche collection.

Annual Reports: Storage of annual reports in a single sequence has been a problem for clients in the past. The CSI numbers for annual reports are now listed in the bibliographic citation and appear on the microfiche header of each report, to make such sequencing possible.

DOCUMENT DELIVERY

Institutions may subscribe to complete or partial collections of the documents in Microlog. Individual copies on microfiche or paper reprint may be ordered through Micromedia's Document Delivery Service. To order, please contact:

INTRODUCTION

Microlog: Index de recherche du Canada met à votre disposition toutes les publications du gouvernement et les travaux de recherche difficiles à se procurer. Combiné aux collections sur microfiches, le service Microlog constitue un outil très efficace pour retrouver les publications des différents gouvernements du Canada, ainsi que celles des organismes qui reçoivent des subventions pour la recherche. Microlog est aussi un service de livraison de documents, sur microfiches ou sous forme imprimée.

CONTENU

Microlog contient entre autres des recherches en sciences physiques, naturelles et sociales, des énoncés de politique, des statistiques et des rapports annuels. Par l'intermédiaire du service Microlog, on peut obtenir les documents qui figurent sur la Liste des publications du gouvernement du Canada environ deux mois après leur parution sur cette liste.

POLITIQUE LINGUISTIQUE

Les ouvrages publiés en français ou en anglais sont indexés et résumés dans la langue de publication; les ouvrages bilingues sont traités dans les deux langues.

SOURCES

Publications fédérales: Les rédacteurs de Microlog examinent les listes émises par le Centre d'édition du gouvernement du Canada et commandent les documents pertinents. En dehors des publications en série, cartes, brochures et manuels, toutes les monographies régies par le Programme de dépôt du gouvernement fédéral figurent dans l'index, ainsi que des ouvrages importants ne figurant pas sur les listes.

Microlog propose aussi une collection spéciale de publications fédérales non déposées, identifiées par un point (●) dans la section Titres et résumés. Microlog est aussi l'agent de diffusion de nombreux organismes gouvernementaux.

Publications provinciales: Des ententes de dépôt ont été conclues avec plusieurs bibliothèques provinciales pour que les abonnés de Microlog reçoivent toutes les publications de ces provinces. Lorsqu'aucune entente n'existe, les listes de publications émises par les provinces sont examinées afin d'acquérir les documents.

Publications municipales: Ces ouvrages étant difficiles à se procurer, les rédacteurs de Microlog redoublent d'ardeur pour les inclure dans l'index.

ACCÈS

L'index imprimé est bilingue et les publications sont répertoriées par sujet, par auteur (collectivité et personne physique) et par titre de collection.

Le fichier complet de Microlog, de 1979 à aujourd'hui, contient près de 50,000 notices et est accessible sur

Can/OLE. Il s'agit d'un moyen idéal pour mettre la main sur des rapports difficiles à trouver qu'on peut commander par l'intermédiaire du service Can/DOCS. À ce propos, veuillez vous adresser au Service à la clientèle Can/OLE, ICIST, Ottawa (Ontario), K1A 0S2.

ORGANISATION DE L'INDEX

Microlog est divisé en cinq sections:

1. Titres et résumés: tous les titres sont catalogués et accompagnés d'un résumé descriptif.
2. Index des noms: donne un accès par auteur, collectivité-auteur et titre de conférence.
3. Titres de collections: tous les rapports publiés en série sont classés par titre et numéro. Ces collections peuvent être commandées individuellement.
4. Index des matières: les descripteurs permettent de trouver facilement les publications pertinentes; un réseau de renvois facilite la recherche.
5. Collections de microfiches: chaque collection apparaît dans une section séparée pour faciliter la recherche. Ces listes peuvent aussi servir à renseigner les usagers sur les nouveautés. Dans la refonte, cette section est insérée sous forme de microfiches.

MICROLOG ET L'INDEX DES STATISTIQUES DU CANADA

Données statistiques: L'Index des statistiques du Canada (CSI) constitue une autre source de référence sur les statistiques contenues dans certaines publications indexées dans Microlog. Celles-ci ont un numéro d'ordre spécial qui est inclus dans la référence bibliographique.

Rapports annuels: Afin de rendre le classement des rapports annuels plus facile, le numéro d'ordre CSI correspondant à ces documents figure maintenant dans les références bibliographiques et est inscrit sur les en-têtes de microfiches.

LIVRAISON DE DOCUMENTS

On peut s'abonner à l'ensemble ou à certaines des collections de documents de Microlog. On peut également commander des reproductions de documents sur microfiches ou sur papier par l'intermédiaire du service de livraison de documents de Micromedia. Pour commander, communiquer avec:

Sample CRI Search

"How can a person from a foreign country qualify for refugee status in Canada?"

The researcher can search in CRI as in any library catalogue - by subject, author and title.

Because the index is bilingual, searching can be done in English or in French.

Recherche type avec IRC

"Comment une personne d'un pays étranger peut-elle demander le statut de réfugié au Canada?"

La méthode de recherche dans IRC est la même que dans une bibliothèque, puisque les documents sont indexés par auteur, par sujet et par titre. L'index étant bilingue, la consultation peut se faire en français ou en anglais.

A unified search strategy

The search strategy should include all the monthly issues. Start with the most recent issue and work back. Monthly issues are cumulated annually.

Établir une stratégie de recherche unifiée

La stratégie de recherche doit tenir compte de toutes les publications mensuelles, à commencer par les plus récentes. Chaque année, ces publications font l'objet d'une refonte.

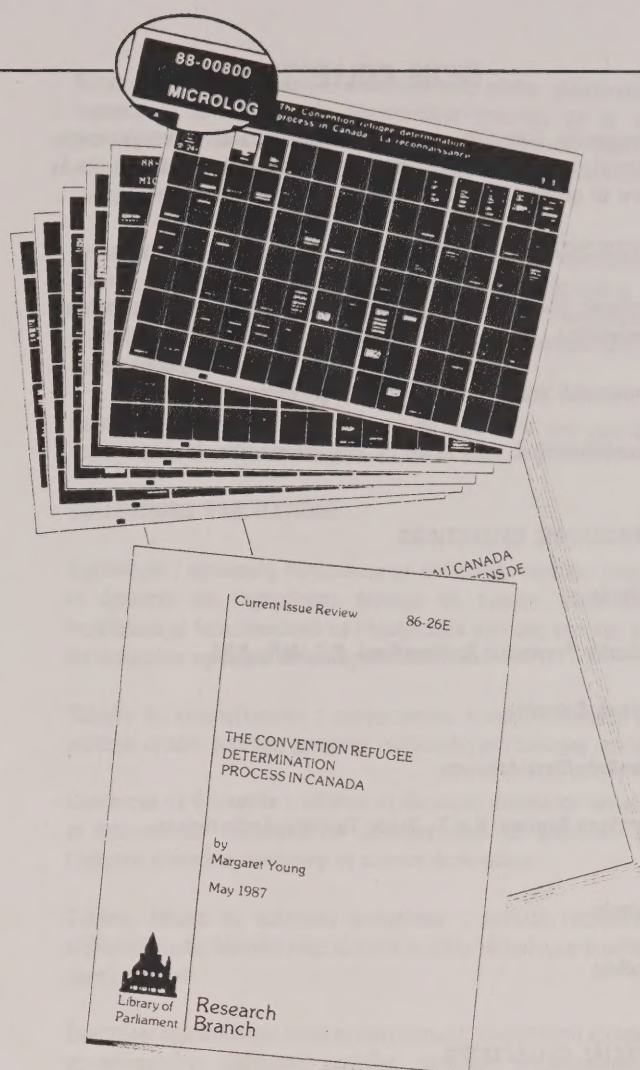

STEP 3/TROISIÈME ÉTAPE

Retrieve the publication

Each bibliographic citation gives a full description of the relevant document. Locate the document by the microfiche number in the library's collection or order from Micromedia. Individual publications are available for purchase on microfiche or paper. The bibliographic description provides publisher source information.

Repérer la publication

Chaque notice bibliographique comprend une description complète du document; celui-ci peut être repéré grâce au numéro de microfiche de la bibliothèque; sinon, il faut le commander à Micromedia. On peut se procurer les monographies sur microfiches ou sur papier. La description bibliographique comporte également des indications sur l'éditeur.

1993 motorcoach customer satisfaction survey

Halifax : Voluntary Planning, Tourism/Transportation Sectors, 1993. 46 p. Cover title: Motorcoach customer satisfaction survey : pilot study. MICROLOG 96-04480 (1 fiche)

Presents results of a survey conducted to obtain an assessment of customer satisfaction levels regarding motorcoach tours available in Nova Scotia. Information was collected in the form of self-administered questionnaires, unsolicited written comments from survey respondents, and personal observations. Passengers surveyed included those on day tours from cruise ships, out-of-province motorcoach tours with Nova Scotia step-on guides, and Nova Scotia motorcoach tours. Survey questions involved overall satisfaction with vacation experience, satisfaction with driver and with tour guide, satisfaction with motorcoach equipment, comparisons of equipment to coaches at other destinations, and the degree of importance of motorcoach condition. Detailed data tables and a sample questionnaire are included.

1995 elections Alberta survey, Calgary-McCall by-election

Edmonton : Alberta Treasury, Statistics, 1995. 90 p. : ill. MICROLOG 96-04221 (1 fiche)

Presents results of a telephone survey of a random sample of residents in the Calgary-McCall election district who did not vote in the district's by-election. The results presented include age distribution of respondents, their level of education, percentage of respondents who had voted in elections outside of Alberta, respondent voting habits, awareness of by-election, respondent recall of advertising related to voting procedures and locations, reasons for not voting, knowledge of voting procedures, and probability of voting with additional services from Elections Alberta. A variety of non-parametric methods were applied to test for statistically significant relationships, and such relationships are noted. The results can be generalised to the Calgary-McCall constituency as a whole. The appendix contains a copy of the survey questionnaire.

B.C. Hydro. Vancouver, BC : B.C. Hydro, 1995. 16 p. : ill. ISBN 0-7726-2807-6 MICROLOG 96-04190 (1 fiche)

The BC Hydro 1995 Integrated Electricity Plan sets out a strategy to meet the utility customers' electricity needs over the next 20 years. This overview of the Plan begins with a discussion of the need for additional electricity resources and the Plan's two main products, the 20-Year Outlook and the Four-Year Action Plan. The former identifies the resources selected to meet long-term electricity requirements, and the latter identifies the immediate steps that need to be taken to ensure resources will be available. This is followed by a summary of the process used to develop the Plan, including a review of Plan objectives, the electricity options that were considered, and the evaluation criteria used to help select resources.

Dans les années 90, profondément touchées par la récession, alors que l'argent se fait rare et que les gouvernements s'efforcent d'utiliser chaque dollar à son maximum, les décideurs provinciaux remettent en question le soutien officiel traditionnel de l'éducation publique. Alternative constant-quality price indexes for modest houses and condominiums in Kitchener Waterloo

By Richard Goy and Marion Steele. Ottawa : Canada Mortgage & Housing Corporation, 1994. xv, 101 p. : ill., Bibl.

The house price fluctuations of the past 20 years have stimulated interest in quality-adjusted house price indexes for existing homes. These are needed for a modest house (or starter home) in order to construct a home ownership affordability index for renters, and to allow analysts to determine the extent to which markets are overheated or depressed. Existing indicators cannot fill these needs. This study estimates an array of alternative price indexes, using the well-known hedonic method for constructing a price index. The study also estimates fixed relative price indexes, which require only a single regression for the whole time period. The study uses a detailed dataset, with information on a large array of structural variables augmented by neighbourhood and accessibility information, and a base sample of transactions sold in Kitchener-Waterloo over 1988-90. The results indicate the extent of differences among the various price indexes tested and the percentage effect on value of unit changes in house characteristics.

Repeated measures and time-series data are common in forestry. Because such data tend to be serially correlated (current measurements correlated with past measurements), they require special methods of analysis. This handbook introduces two broad classes of methods developed for this purpose: repeated-measures analysis of variance and time-series analysis. Both types of analyses are described briefly and are illustrated with forestry examples. Several procedures available in the SAS software package for the analysis of repeated measures and time series are also discussed. The discussion includes coverage of the application of the REPEATED statement in the SAS procedures PROC GLM (and PROC NOVA) and time-series procedures for PROC AUTOREG, PROC ARIMA, and PROC FORECAST.

Animal protection

Manitoba. Law Reform Commission. Winnipeg : The Commission, 1996. iii, 74 p. : Bibl. (Report / Manitoba. Law Reform Commission ; no. 93) ISBN 0-7711-1451-6
MICROLOG 96-04491 (1 fiche)

In Manitoba, the most important animal protection provisions are located in the Animal Diseases Act and the Animal Husbandry Act, although provisions protecting animals can be found in several other statutes as well. The lack of a single act devoted to animal protection, as well as incremental legislative changes over several decades, have resulted in an inefficient legislative structure for animal protection in the province, with conflicting and uncoordinated provisions enforced by a variety of officials and agencies. This report begins with a review of Manitoba animal protection legislation and its flaws, then proceeds to propose a reorganised system of animal protection based on clear principles. Subsequent sections of the report cover the types of animal suffering which could justify intervention, the need for prevention (including the creation of provincial offence provisions to deter animal mistreatment), issues relating to the entry into private property for the purpose of protecting animals, and the appointment of agents to enforce the proposed animal protection scheme. The report concludes with a recommendation on the proper location of animal protection provisions within provincial legislation and a restatement of the recommendations provided throughout the rest of the report.

Appeal mechanisms review : a discussion paper

MICROLOG 96-04212 (1 fiche)

This report represents the first stage of a multi-phase review of appeal, complaint, and inquiry mechanisms in Alberta's health system. It describes the existing system, noting the four current sources of inquiries/complaints and appeals: appeals of services or programs, of resource allocation, of restriction of liberty, and professional competency issues. It then makes some initial observations on the appeal structure, including its complexity, fragmentation, duplication, and context, as well as perceptions of equity in the system and the system's gaps and inadequacies. Finally, the report lists principles of an ideal, effective appeal system that would be based on the principles of consumer focus, integration, appropriateness, accessibility, affordability, accountability, timeliness, fairness and equability, and other attributes.

In January 1988, the Ontario Arts Council announced the creation of the Artists and the Workplace Program from special funds allocated by the Ministry of Culture and Communications. This program was designed to assist artists in all disciplines to work in residence with the trade union movement. It was also intended to create work experience in this area and to help artists better understand other workers. This program's parallel purpose was to assist the trade union movement in introducing arts programming to its membership, thereby extending the benefits of arts access and participation to new and larger audiences and communities through the working environment. This document presents the report from the Ontario Arts Council on the pilot phase of the program.

By Chris Gales and Judith Ramsay. Ottawa : Canadian Mortgage & Housing Corporation, Research Division, 1995. vii, 85 p. : ill., Bibl.

This study investigates the needs of key municipal stakeholders for information on urban infrastructure and identifies impediments pertaining to the dissemination of information on the management, financing, community planning, and technological aspects of municipal infrastructure. In particular, the study attempts to identify information gaps, to examine issues and problems related to the quality and accessibility of information, and to identify potential information dissemination techniques which may be able to address those gaps. The investigation included a survey of municipal infrastructure professionals, a review of possible mechanisms for disseminating information on municipal infrastructure, and a stakeholder strategic planning meeting to review the preliminary results of the survey and to develop recommendations. The appendix discusses a wide range of information dissemination mechanisms and summarises five generic types: codes and standards, education and training, publications, information clearinghouses, and computer networks and databases. A copy of the survey questionnaire is included.

The estimation of the three-dimensional (3D) ground structure using stereoscopic image pairs or image sequences acquired by a moving platform (aircraft or satellite) is a task that can be automated. This report describes stereoscopic vision algorithms adapted to images acquired in the pushbroom mode. For the purpose of this study, pushbroom image pairs (such as SPOT or LANDSAT satellite images) were reconstituted from image sequences acquired during the MUSIC trial held in Australia in 1992. These image pairs, along with image pairs with known ground truth acquired in the laboratory, were used to analyse the performance and stability of various methods of image matching, i.e. the methods for image segmentation, segment matching, and for the evaluation of the disparity caused by parallax. The evaluated disparity is finally translated into a relief map by converting the image parallax values into 3D ground co-ordinates.

A Bilevel model of taxation and its application to optimal highway pricing

This paper considers a bilevel model where the leader wants to maximise revenues from a taxation scheme, while the follower rationally reacts to those tax levels. The first part of the paper introduces the general model and reformulates it as a standard linear bilevel program, deriving an economic interpretation of an optimal taxation strategy. The second part focuses on the problem of setting tolls on a specified subset of arcs of a multicommodity transportation network. This model is formulated as a bilevel program with bilinear objectives at both levels of decision and network constraints at the lower level. The toll optimisation problem is subjected to theoretical and algorithmic analysis, showing that important special cases can be solved in polynomial time. A medium-sized example involving four origin-destination pairs, 11 nodes, and 25 arcs illustrates the features of the toll optimisation model. The final part proposes a multiclass extension of the basic model.

Alberta Advisory Council on Women's Issues. Edmonton : The Council, 1996. 46 p. : ill. ISBN 0-7732-1901-3 MICROLOG 96-04222 (1 fiche)

Summarises results of a public consultation of Alberta women drawn from a wide range of ages, cultural backgrounds, economic status, educational levels, and rural and urban areas. The intent of the consultation was to ask women how they have communicated their concerns to the Alberta government, how effective these strategies were, and what methods and structures could be used in the future. Women were also asked to identify the issues they thought were important to the women of Alberta. The consultation process involved 34 focus groups, receipt of written submissions from women's groups and individual women, and comments from telephone calls received. The results include identification of six general areas perceived as barriers for having impact and effecting change; eight major issues that impact on women and need to be addressed; and five options for the structures and methods necessary to continue work on women's issues. Concludes with formal recommendations on the ensuring of appropriate levels of representation of women in government.

Broadband adaptive beamforming in the presence of transient interference

By G. Niezgoda, David N. Swingler and J. Krolik. Dartmouth, NS : National Defence, Research & Development Branch, Defence Research Establishment Atlantic, 1994. 172 p. : ill., Bibl. (DREA contractor report / Defence Research Establishment Atlantic ; DREA CR/94/405) MICROLOG 96-04278 (2 fiche)

This report proposes a multiple time-scale version of the cascaded modular minimum variance distortionless response (M2VDR) beamformer to allow simultaneous suppression of both transient and continuous interferers in the oceanic medium. To cancel short duration interferers, the multiple-stage beamformer computes a small number of weights assigned to a stage on a time scale approximating the duration of the interferer. Since the stage has fewer weights to compute than the total number available to the beamformer, a reduction in adaptation time is possible without incurring performance degradation from weight noise variance. To combat long duration interference events, other beamformer stages apply the remaining weights which in turn may be adapted over a longer period. The report derives closed-form expressions relating adaptation time and adaptive degrees of freedom to mean output power, mean-squared error, and output signal-to-noise ratio for the M2VDR beamformer. Simulation experiments demonstrate the applicability of the beamformer when wavefield measurements contain short duration interference components.

This report provides a preliminary examination of rare and endangered bryophytes in British Columbia, restricted to species considered critically imperilled because they have been collected at five or fewer localities in the province. The report begins with a ranking of rare and endangered bryophytes in three categories: species collected in the past but all known populations extirpated; species tentatively ranked as critically imperilled at the global level; and species tentatively ranked as critically imperilled at the provincial level. This is followed by lists of species by biogeoclimatic zone and a ranking of zones in descending order based on the relative number of localities in which rare species have been collected and the degree of threats to known populations by human activities. The report then discusses potential threats to rare and endangered bryophyte species, including those from forest harvesting, agriculture, air pollution, residential development, and global warming. The report concludes with a description of bryophyte survey techniques and recommendations for further research. The appendix contains a list of rare and endangered bryophyte occurrences in British Columbia, including source of the occurrence report, habitat, and locality for each species.

This study reveals many of the barriers that prevent people with disabilities from taking part in post-secondary education or vocational training. These barriers include rigid competency-based admission criteria, negative attitudes of instructors, funding structures that promote segregation and labelling of the disabled, and lack of alternatives to traditional vocational certification. The study first frames education as a human right and then explores the legal and policy context for inclusive post-secondary education in the provinces. Chapters examine the practice of inclusion, the systems of supports for instructors and students, and means of overcoming key obstacles in the promotion of inclusive post-secondary education for persons with intellectual disabilities. Case summaries are included which illustrate the defence of inclusive education in the courts. Implications of fiscal restraint on post-secondary education of disabled persons are also discussed. The authors use a maximum likelihood method to calibrate a probabilistic bubble evolution model against data of bubbles detected in divers. They obtained the data from a diverse set of 2,064 chamber man-dives involving air and heliox with and without oxygen decompression. Bubbles were measured with Doppler ultrasound and graded according to the Kisman-Masurel code from which a single maximum bubble grade per diver was compared to the maximum bubble radius predicted by the model. The authors carried out the comparison using multinomial statistics by relating bubble grade to maximum bubble radius through a series of probability functions. Gas exchange between the model compartment and blood was assumed to be perfusion-limited. The authors present the most successful calibration algorithm found and the best fit estimates for the parameters investigated. CA LS ND PS SC

Canada Business Corporations Act, discussion paper : financial assistance and related provisions

Ottawa : Industry Canada, 1996. iv, 112 p. : Bibl. French ed. (La Loi canadienne sur les sociétés...) : 96-04261/2. MICROLOG 96-04238 (2 fiche)

Section 44 of the Canada Business Corporations Act restricts the giving of loans, guarantees, and other kinds of financial assistance to corporations where the directors have reasonable grounds for believing that the corporation cannot meet specific assets and solvency tests. A related section of the Act (120) requires directors and officers to disclose whether they are a party to a material contract with the corporation or have an interest in a person who is a party to a material contract with the corporation. This paper describes the current Section 44 regime and its purpose, situates Section 44 within the overall framework for conflict of interest established by corporate law, compares other approaches to conflict of interest, and considers general problems or issues related to Section 44, such as competitiveness, director liability, and protection for creditors and shareholders. The paper also reviews comments already made on Section 44 by Corporations Act stakeholders, presents options and recommendations for amending or repealing Section 44, and reviews problems and options with respect to Section 120. The appendices include the text of Section 44 and related sections, a detailed review of other conflict of interest regimes, and possible clarifications of Section 44.

Canada Business Corporations Act, discussion paper : unanimous shareholder agreements

Ottawa : Industry Canada, 1996. iv, 75 p. : Bibl. French ed. (La Loi canadienne...) : 96-04259/1. MICROLOG 96-04260 (1 fiche)

A unanimous shareholder agreement is an agreement among all the shareholders of a corporation concerning the management of the corporation. This special type of agreement becomes part of the internal constitution of the corporation. Provisions on unanimous shareholder agreements were adopted into the Canada Business Corporations Act in 1975 and were designed to give shareholders of closely-held corporations more flexibility in arranging the internal affairs of the corporation to suit the needs of that corporation and its investors. A number of problems have arisen with both the wording and the approach of these provisions. This paper reviews those problems, examines other regulatory regimes, and explores ways to improve the law for corporations and their shareholders. In particular, it considers means to improve federal business corporate law for Canadian small businesses through the modernisation of the unanimous shareholder agreement rules. Fifteen specific issues are examined along with a wide range of options for possible amendments to the Act. These issues include the definition of unanimous shareholder agreement, eligibility requirements, shareholder duties, boards of directors, third parties, and opting out of provisions of the Act. The appendices include texts of corporation act provisions used in various jurisdictions regarding unanimous shareholder agreements.

Ce rapport présente l'évolution de la régénération préétablie d'épinette noire au cours des premières années qui suivent la coupe avec protection de la régénération. Au cours des trois premières années, les tiges de moins de 30 cm de hauteur au moment de la coupe et celles qui possédaient une cime peu développée ont souffert d'un taux de mortalité très élevé. Ce taux, toutes catégories confondues, était de 34 %. Malgré cela, le coefficient de distribution de la régénération a diminué de moins de 10 %. D'autres études portant sur une période de cinq à sept ans donnent des résultats comparables. Ils démontrent de plus que les tiges de bonne qualité atteignent rapidement un taux de croissance largement supérieur à celui des autres tiges. L'approche utilisée permettrait donc de prédire, immédiatement après la coupe, l'évolution de la régénération et, par voie de conséquences, de déterminer si elle est suffisante pour rencontrer les objectifs de production.

Cardiovascular effects of varying G-suit pressure and coverage during +1 Gz positive pressure breathing Traditional anti-gravity suit pressurisation is set at between 3.2 and 4 times the breathing pressure, as established during work conducted in the 1970s and 1980s using standard coverage G-suits. Recent research suggests that G-suit inflation might be inappropriately high when using the newer near-full coverage G-suits. This study tests the effects of reducing G-suit pressure during +1Gz ground-level positive pressure breathing (PPB) using varying-coverage G-suits. The investigators exposed nine experienced subjects to two minutes of 70-millimetre mercury PPB while wearing either the Combat Edge and Tactical Life Support System garments with the G-suit inflated to 4 times breathing pressure, and the Advanced Tactical Anti-G Suit at 4, 3, 2, and 1 times the breathing pressure. All subjects were measured with impedance cardiography (IC) and six were measured simultaneously with both IC and the Cardioscint nuclear probe. Results and statistical analyses are presented, including estimated stroke volumes, cardiac output, and various measures of cardiocirculatory response.

This study employs principal components analysis (PCA) to explore the interrelationships and trends in both the chlorinated dibenzo-p-dioxin and dibenzofuran patterns and the toxic congener composition among British Columbia pulp and paper mill sites, and between harbours and mill sites. The researchers applied PCA to a large data set of the concentrations of dioxins and furans in samples of crab hepatopancreas from locations in the vicinity of British Columbia coastal mills and the principal harbours in the province. PCA distinguishes harbour samples from mill samples, reveals differences between individual mill sites, and reliably classifies the dioxin and furan congener patterns according to chlorine bleaching, digested polychlorinated phenol, and pentachlorophenol wood preservative sources. PCA is also used to assign sources to individual crab samples. The study results indicate the changes in dioxin and furan congener composition over time.

This paper begins with the hypothesis that there exists a set of three colour channels, linear combinations of the cones, for which a simple von Kries type scaling, or coefficient rule, is an adequate vehicle for colour constancy. The paper then develops a computational method for solving for the three colour channels most consistent with the hypothesis; these are called the coefficient colour channels. Simulations are used to compare vehicles for colour constancy between a von Kries type scaling and the new coefficient channels. As a second step, the paper considers experimental evidence for the presence of coefficient channels in the human visual system, including a review of the literature on stimulus-response studies which have observed colour channels similar to the derived channels.

The stability of our perception of surface colours despite changes in illumination is called colour constancy. Illumination is rarely constant in intensity or colour throughout a scene; multiple light sources with different spectra are the norm.

Nonetheless, almost all colour constancy algorithms assume that the spectrum of incident illumination remains constant across the scene. This paper assumes the converse, that illumination does vary. In developing a new algorithm for colour constancy. The algorithm requires as input two red-green-blue measurements of the same surface reflectance under two spectrally distinct incident illuminations, and outputs the chromaticity of the surface as it would be measured under a predefined standard canonical illuminant spectrum. The paper also shows the possibility of colour constancy given a non-linear description of illumination. In addition, it derives a model of illumination based on a statistical analysis of illuminants and reflectances. The final section presents results of colour constancy experiments where both linear and non-linear illuminant assumptions are made.

A colour-coded glove provides a system for tracking the motion of a human hand with many useful clues about the location of the fingertips and joints. This paper describes a hand-tracking system that exploits these clues and is able to follow a gloved hand and describe the three-dimensional shape and position of the hand as it moves. The system is based on a simple three-dimensional skeletal model of the hand. The model is fitted using standard numerical non-linear optimisation techniques so that its two-dimensional projection matches each image frame. To identify particular joints and fingertips easily in the image, the system relies on a unique encoding based on combinations of ring-shaped markers. The hand tracker has been tested on both synthetic data and real image sequences, and test results are reviewed.

Ce rapport est présenté en quatre parties. La première partie est un exposé détaillé des faits examinés lors de la première phase des audiences publiques de la Commission d'enquête sur certains événements survenus à la Prison des femmes de Kingston, où la preuve a été constituée, sous forme de documents et de témoignages sous serment, à la manière des tribunaux. Cette partie contient des conclusions sur les faits, des commentaires sur l'absence de certaines mesures et l'évaluation du rendement du Service correctionnel en rapport avec ces événements. Le second volet du rapport prend un certain recul par rapport à ces événements et examine certaines questions d'orientation générale soulevées par ces événements. La troisième partie du rapport comporte un bref historique qui retrace le cheminement de ces questions contemporaines au fil des étés et des rapports qui ont traités de la détention des femmes. La dernière partie est une liste et une consolidation sans autres commentaires des recommandations particulières qui apparaissent tout au long des premières parties du rapport.

In February and March 1995, communities within the Regional Municipality of Hamilton-Wentworth participated in a cross-sectoral community consultation on human service priorities. The key goals of the consultation were to enable the community to identify local health and social service priorities, and to provide an opportunity for community discussion of a variety of strategies to achieve greater community well-being within the constraints of available resources. This paper was written with a view to examining and analysing the consultation process so that strengths could be built upon for future undertakings and weaknesses could be eliminated. The paper first provides background on the co-ordinated planning and priorities model for community services that was examined in the consultation. It then describes the consultation process, and finally discusses and analyses the outcomes of the consultation based on input received from participant feedback forms and key informant interviews.

This strategy is intended to provide a framework and focus for private- and public-sector co-operation and to present possible directions for government and industry stakeholders in long-term competitive tourism marketing and development activities in Metropolitan Toronto. The strategy was developed based on extensive involvement from all sectors of the Metro Toronto tourism industry in addition to consumer focus group research and interviews with US-based meeting planners, travel agents, and travel writers. The strategy has the vision for Metro Toronto's tourism industry to become a leading leisure/pleasure destination in North America, and recognises the need to build on Metro's image as an exciting destination by stressing the importance of festivals and events. This document reviews the current state of tourism in Metro Toronto, including its economic impact, market trends, and key factors involved in successful development of the tourist market. It outlines the strategic plan and presents a series of actions for implementing the plan, including creation of a tourism strategic planning group, promoting community involvement, defining roles and responsibilities, identifying funding mechanisms, developing tourist markets with future potential, pursuing additional convention/trade show markets, and enhancing Toronto's position as a gateway and regional centre.

Atlantic Canada lobster fisheries have many common characteristics, of which the following are of concern: high landings, based essentially on new immature recruits; increasing fishing pressure; inadequate enforcement; and an over-dependence on scientific analysis. In addition, the fishery is divided into 47 different Lobster Fishing Areas, whose management measures can differ from one area to the next without considering the conservation spillover effect between areas. This report presents results of an examination of the whole Atlantic lobster management system, conducted through stakeholder meetings, public consultations, discussions with appropriate experts, and reviews of industry submissions. The report begins with some background information on lobster biology and management. It then analyses the current lobster resource situation and other conservation issues facing the Atlantic lobster fishery. Finally, it recommends a mechanism for resolving conservation issues, including a definition of lobster conservation with related objectives; conservation principles; a conservation strategy; a more appropriate geographic basis for considering lobster conservation strategies; and a series of tool kits of conservation measures that can be implemented selectively to meet conservation objectives and targets. The appendix includes a glossary, a summary of consultations, lobster fishery statistics, and a summary of the international lobster situation.

Summarises the test procedures used and the resulting findings from testing houses in 12 Canadian cities using three different sealing conditions: with all intentional openings sealed, with all intentional openings plus all obvious unintentional openings not suitable for make-up air sealed, and with the house in its normal or lived-in state. Data collected included building envelope area, volume, location of the neutral pressure plane, number of exhaust devices, presence of other openings, and the air leakage measurements themselves, which followed the procedure set out in the Canadian General Standards Board standard. Variations in normalised air leakage rates by geographic region are noted.

Examines the issue of conventional arms proliferation from the Canadian perspective, with particular emphasis on identifying pragmatic options for action, based on Canadian national interests, that could contribute to international efforts to constrain conventional arms proliferation. Also addresses the strengths and limitations of Canada's ability to contribute to such international efforts. Among the issues discussed are the global conventional arms trade, Canada's defence production and exports, transparency measures such as the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms, the relationship of arms spending to human rights as well as social and economic development, and post-conflict conventional weapons disarmament measures. Reviews patterns and consequences of conventional proliferation, past and present efforts to constrain conventional proliferation, and options for constraining conventional proliferation. These options include unilateral measures, basic norm building, and multilateral opportunities.

This paper analyses the convergence behaviour of descent algorithms for finding points that satisfy a specified monotone variational inequality. To find a solution, it introduces a non-negative and continuously differentiable functional Φ such that $\Phi(x) = 0$ if and only if x is a solution of the variational inequality. The paper first proves that if Φ satisfies some general descent condition, a defined sequence of iterates converges to a solution of the variational inequality. It then shows that several algorithms satisfy the given descent condition.

Ce cahier de recherche identifie de nouvelles formules de financement pour les coopératives d'habitation reposant, dans des proportions variables, sur un investissement en capital des membres. Réalisée au moyen d'une recherche bibliographique et d'entrevues, cette étude permet d'identifier les caractéristiques de plusieurs tentatives envisagées et d'expériences réalisées. Dans un premier temps, une liste des formules de coopération dans le domaine de l'habitation est dressée. Par la suite, seize expérimentations sont présentées : quatorze de ces projets sont situés au Québec, un en Colombie-Britannique et le dernier en Suède. Une bibliographie sur les formules novatrices de coopératives d'habitation complète le document.

Costs of alternate strip cutting and clear-cutting in upland black spruce

The most widely used method of harvesting upland black spruce is clear-cutting, which presents a number of problems related to forest regeneration in the cut areas. To investigate harvest alternatives that could mitigate this regeneration problem, a government/industry co-operative project examined the effectiveness of alternate strip cutting on shallow-soil upland sites in Ontario. Alternate strip cutting results in higher harvesting costs than conventional clear-cutting, but savings can be realised when regenerating the next stand. This technical note analyses the additional harvesting costs of strip cutting compared with clear-cutting, as well as the renewal savings associated with alternate strip cutting. It also discusses the management implications of using the alternate harvest method.

Ce document est le résumé d'un rapport intitulé Coûts de l'infrastructure associés aux approches traditionnelles et nouvelles en matière d'aménagement. L'objectif de l'étude est d'évaluer et de comparer la rentabilité de deux approches d'aménagement communautaire : une approche conventionnelle d'aménagement de banlieue et une approche d'aménagement plus dense, à utilisation mixte, planifiée selon les principes du nouvel urbanisme. L'analyse examine les coûts à long terme du "cycle de vie" de diverses infrastructures linéaires et divers services communautaires et fait la distinction entre les coûts publics et les coûts privés.

Creating a continuous learning culture in Nova Scotia

Halifax : Voluntary Planning, 1994. 10 p. : Bibl.
MICROLOG 96-04481 (1 fiche)

Begins with a discussion of the importance of continuous learning in society and continues by discussing the ways in which a culture that favours continuous learning can be created in Nova Scotia. Provides evidence on the importance of learning throughout life as seen in the relationship between labour force participation and education, the need to adapt to a changing world and to a changing workplace, the integration of lifelong learning with community development, the benefits of continuous learning for business, and the various partnerships involved in the continuous learning process. Concludes with outlines of the principles for achieving a comprehensive continuous learning culture in the province and the actions which can be taken at the local level. The appendix briefly discusses the role of community education councils in developing a learning culture.

Le but premier de cette étude est de faire état des constatations récentes faites au Canada sur les effets des méthodes de mesure en ce qui concerne la création d'emplois selon la taille des entreprises. Après avoir tenté, en particulier, de réduire le poids de la composante transitoire de la variation de l'emploi liée à une régression à court terme vers la moyenne, nous nous demandons à nouveau si les petites entreprises représentent une part disproportionnée de la création d'emplois.

La croissance en hauteur d'épinettes noires et de sapins baumiers dominants, sur une période de dix ans après une coupe totale, a été observée dans une pessière noire en régénération de la partie sud de la forêt boréale. Le sapin a réagi plus rapidement que l'épinette à la disparition du peuplement mûr, mais il a atteint son taux maximal de croissance cinq ans après la coupe, pour décliner par la suite. Le taux de croissance de l'épinette, par contre, a augmenté graduellement, mais de façon continue, durant toute la période concernée. Si la tendance se maintient, l'épinette devrait occuper une place importante dans le nouveau peuplement, contrairement à ce que laissait supposer l'évolution de la croissance en hauteur au cours des premières années après la coupe.

DEAFCO, community economic development feasibility study

It is estimated that about 10% of Hamilton-Wentworth residents are deaf or hard of hearing. Many deaf people have difficulties getting jobs or starting businesses because of communication problems. Accordingly, a group of concerned individuals in the region came together who were interested in starting business ventures for deaf and hard of hearing people that would provide employment and training. This group called itself DEAFCO, and its primary goal was to find ways to overcome barriers that the deaf community face when accessing training and employment. This report presents results of a feasibility study examining various community economic development models that would allow DEAFCO to achieve its goals. Study methodology included a literature review, personal interviews, a community forum, a comparison survey, and in-person questionnaire surveys. From preliminary findings, the concept of a deaf business network being established to provide training and foster local business ventures for and by the deaf community was discussed at a second community forum. Recommendations are included for the fu-

MICROLOG 96-04118 (1 fiche)

Summarises results of a study conducted to review and assess the viability and limitations of forest engineering debris control structures, and to provide a number of conceptual designs for such structures. The study was limited to debris flow control structures located on the debris fan (or deposition zone of the channelised debris flow path), with the emphasis for conceptual design limited to the less expensive structures that can be built by forest company personnel using local materials, generally available construction equipment, and conventional construction techniques. The report also reviews design considerations for debris flow control structures and the debris flow control methods currently being used in British Columbia and elsewhere. Structures reviewed include open structures such as baffles, check dams, and lateral or terminal walls; closed structures such as debris racks and storage basins; and sediment control structures. Sketches and discussions of seven debris flow control structures for use on the Queen Charlotte Islands are provided as examples. The appendix contains a preliminary functional design for mitigative works at Boat Launch Creek on the west coast of Vancouver Island.

Definition of a performance evaluation methodology for sensor data fusion systems

A key element in the anticipated information problem on a naval platform is the ability to combine or fuse data from various sensors, not only as a volume reducing strategy but also as a means to exploit the unique combinations of data that may be available. In the development of an optimal multi-sensor data fusion (MSDF) function that will enhance the tactical performance of the command and control system of the Canadian Patrol Frigate, rigorously evaluating the performance of MSDF systems is of prime importance. This document proposes a seven-step scheme or methodology to be used for MSDF performance evaluation in computer simulations. It also discusses the use of sensors and advanced data fusion systems in naval defence applications in the perspective of evaluating their performance for surveillance and tracking; discusses the MSDF system in terms of its internal subprocesses, environment, and output results; and addresses some of the performance evaluation issues encountered in the use of MSDF systems in defence applications. Demographic change and the housing market in Canada

By Arthur Hosios and George Fallis. Ottawa : Canada Mortgage & Housing Corporation, 1995. 102 p. : ill., Bibl. MICROLOG 96-04156 (2 fiche)

Reviews of empirical research on household formation and tenure choice confirm that headship rates and ownership propensities respond positively to income and negatively to housing prices. This report investigates how demographic change affects the housing market, developing a technique for projecting headship rates and ownership propensities, by household type and age group, on the bases of expected future changes in incomes, prices, rents, and mortgage interest rates. The investigation uses Statistics Canada-Canada Mortgage and Housing aggregate annual time series data for the 1961-91 sample period to estimate headship rate and ownership propensity functions for family and non-family households with heads aged 15-24, 25-34, 35-64, and over 65. Forecasts of per-capita income, mortgage interest rates, price inflation, market rents, and house prices were generated by econometric models. The report presents results of forecasts of changes in headship and ownership rates over the period 1991-2003. CA CO ND PS SA SS

Depositional history of sediments in Lake Athabasca : geochronology, bulk parameters, contaminants and biogeochemical markers

The primary objective of this study was to collect and analyse high quality, well-described sediment cores for use in defining the depositional history of sediment-bound contaminants in Lake Athabasca, including those which have atmospheric or upstream sources. The researchers dated the cores using the lead and caesium methods, and used these geochronological results to determine sedimentation rates and time scales, as well as the suitability of the cores for subsequent contaminant analyses. Selected cores were to be analysed for particle size distribution, bulk carbon and nitrogen species, radionuclides, total polychlorinated dioxins and furans, heavy metals, polynuclear aromatic hydrocarbons, fatty acids, and biogeochemical marker parameters derived from alkanes and fatty acids. Results presented include trends in contaminant concentrations over the past century, correlations of observed trends with human activities or natural occurrences, and likely sources of sediment contaminants. R71-49/3-71E MICROLOG 96-04092 (1 fiche)

The primary objective of this study was to examine whether sediment cores from headwater lakes can be used to track naturally produced biomarkers and contaminants transported atmospherically. The researchers addressed this objective specifically by dating sediment cores from Legend and Weekes lakes in northern Alberta. They dated the cores using the lead and caesium methods, and used these geochronological results to determine sedimentation rates and time scales, as well as the utility of the cores for subsequent contaminant analyses. Cores were also analysed for bulk parameters such as particle size distribution, bulk carbon and nitrogen species, and atomic carbon/nitrogen ratios in order to obtain indications of the consistency of the depositional environment. Results from these two reference lakes will be compared with results of contaminant analyses on Lake Athabasca cores to determine if contaminants in Lake Athabasca sediments originate from atmospheric or upstream effluent sources. Depth perception of a stationary object by a moving camera

This report examines the visual sensing configuration in which a single camera is mounted on a vehicle which is in motion with respect to a stationary object of interest. This configuration is examined in an effort to use an infrared camera mounted on an unmanned vehicle to locate landmines accurately. The exact motion of the camera, while not precisely known, is estimated from noisy position and orientation measurements. The report compares two solutions: using a flat-earth approximation to determine the location of the object from a single image, and implementation of monocular motion stereo vision using a Kalman filtering method in which the incoming images are recursively used to predict the object's location as well as the motion and location of the camera. The error in the Kalman filter is compared to the theoretical Cramer-Rao lower bounds in order to determine the effectiveness of the filter. The data used to test the Kalman filter and the flat-earth approximation are simulated for various vehicle manoeuvres, and simulation results are presented. CA ND PS SC

Design and experimental investigation of two-dimensional acousto-optic processors for ESM applications : final report

Introduces a novel acousto-optic signal processor with a two-dimensional architecture that plots the energy distribution with axes corresponding to the carrier frequency and pulse repetition frequency. The processor has the potential of identifying carrier frequency and pulse repetition frequency of radar signals with processing time that is independent of the pulse density in the signal environment. More generally, the new architecture can be used for carrier frequency and envelope modulation analysis. The paper describes two configurations of the proposed architecture, discusses input-output relationships, and reviews application of the processor to intercept low probability of intercept (LPI) radar signals with emphasis on identification of very strong narrow-band interfering signals and their excision from the received spectrum. Includes results of numerical simulation and laboratory experiments. CA ND PS SC

A variety of approaches are currently being used to study the dynamics of conifer/broad-leaved mixtures and key processes in mixedwood forests. The methodology used in any study must be tailored to the questions that the experiment is designed to answer and to the species being studied. However, standards are needed to ensure that mixedwood studies are statistically sound so that project objectives are satisfied. The purpose of this workshop was to discuss designs and approaches appropriate for studying the dynamics of conifer-broadleaf mixtures in British Columbia. Speakers shared their ideas and experiences using different approaches and discussed various methods being used, the merits of those approaches, limitations encountered, and possible alternatives. This report contains written summaries of the workshop presentations. Specific topics of the presentations include field studies of alder/conifer mixtures, design of a birch/conifer mixture study, sampling during a stand reconstruction study, planting designs for analysis of species interaction, mixedwood monitoring and modelling, analysing feasibility of a triple rotation system, species competition studies, randomised block designs, and statistical tools. Detection implications of combining conventional and adaptive beamforming

By David N. Swingler. Dartmouth, NS : National Defence, Research & Development Branch, Defence Research Establishment Atlantic, 1995. 90 p. : ill., Bibl. (DREA contractor report / Defence Research Establishment Atlantic ; DREA CR/95/424)

This study examines, primarily via simulation experiments, the convergence behaviours of various minimum-variance adaptive line-array beamformers in highly dynamic narrowband scenarios. Seven beamformers are considered: conventional; normalised least-mean square adaptive (NLMS); recursive least-mean square (RLS) adaptive; adaptive, based on the sample matrix inverse; a modified form of the NLMS, where if its performance is deemed inferior, its weights are updated by the current best beamformer; a similarly modified version of the RLS beamformer; and a hybrid beamformer whose instantaneous output is the average of the two beamformers with the lowest instantaneous output amplitudes. The issue of adaptive beamforming in multipath situations is discussed and the advantages of decorrelation by straightforward spatial smoothing and array reversal methods are demonstrated by simulation and analysis. In non-multipath scenarios, the study computes some simple steady-state detection characteristics such as output signal to noise ratio and deflection factor. Finally, the issue of computational load is briefly addressed. CA ND PS SC

Describes two areas of enhancement to the PRODAT acoustic signal processing software. The first is the addition of X-Windows display routines which display lofargrams and spectra on non-MASSCOMP machines. These routines make use of the Sonar Display Utility (SDU) library of X-Windows routines. The second area is the addition of the Clutter Tool, which allows a user to select points and lines on a lofargram display to assist in the analysis of narrow-band ambient noise. The addition of this functionality required changes to the SDU library routines which are also described. Includes a user guide for PRODAT enhancements. CA ND PS SC

Dissociation of the behavioral and subjective components of nitrogen narcosis and diver adaptation

By K. Hamilton, B. Fowler and M-F. Laliberté. North York, ON : Defence & Civil Institute of Environmental Medicine, 1995. 9 p. : ill., Bibl. (DCIEM publication / Defence & Civil Institute of Environmental Medicine (Canada) : 91-61) In Undersea & Hyperbaric Medicine : vol. 22, no. 1, 1995. MICROLOG 96-04108 (1 fiche)

Describes an investigation into the adaptation to nitrogen narcosis, in which 11 experienced divers were subjected to the equivalent compression of 54.6 metres of sea water in a hyperbaric chamber once a day for five consecutive days. The investigators assessed the behavioural component of narcosis with a serial choice-reaction time task, and the subjective component with a global magnitude estimate. Supplementary magnitude estimates were obtained with adjectives describing work effectiveness and body sensations. Results presented include the degree of adaptation and evidence of learning in the reaction time task, and the degree of adaptation in the global magnitude estimate dissociated from the reaction time task. Conclusions are proposed relating to the anecdotal reports of adaptation by divers and the reasons for dissociation of the behavioural and subjective components of adaptation. BS CA LS ND SC

Diversity-sensitive gender planning

The purpose of this research is to examine current women and development literature as it pertains to gender planning; to explore ways in which the planning of development projects can become more sensitive to the needs and well-being of a diversity of women; and to further the development of diversity-sensitive gender planning criteria. The research methodology included a literature review of gender and planning theory, a participatory workshop with women involved in development or community planning work, interviews, and participation in conferences relating to women or gender. Sections of the report include a historical review of women and their involvement in the development process; discussion of differences between the term 'women in development' and 'gender and development' theory, and of the role and place of gender planning; a review of the feminist research conducted; and presentation of the output of this research, a gender planning criterion for diversity-sensitive gender planning. Concludes with a discussion of the implications of the research for planners. BC PL PR SA SS

The Double hull issue and oil spill risk on the Pacific west coast

D.F. Dickens Associates. Salt Spring Island, BC : Dickens ; Victoria : BC Environment, Enforcement & Environmental Emergencies Branch, 1995. IX, 39 p. : ill., Bibl. MICROLOG 96-04025 (1 fiche)

Some 250 million barrels of crude oil and refined products are moved by tanker and barge over British Columbia coastal waterways, and there is a significant risk that some of this oil will be spilled accidentally into the environment. This paper begins with a review of tanker volumes and patterns along the Canadian west coast and neighbouring United States coast. It then discusses the range of tanker hull designs in current use or proposed (single bottom, double bottom, mid-deck, and double hull) and their advantages (if any) and drawbacks in the event of a collision or grounding leading to a potential oil spill. Interim protection measures for reducing the oil spill risk of single-hull vessels are also discussed. Emphasis is placed on the superiority of double hull construction in reducing oil spill risk. The paper ends with a comparison of United States, Canadian, and International regulations governing tanker and barge design, and the effect of those regulations on replacement of single-hull tankers with double-hull designs. Benefits and costs of such replacement are also evaluated. BC PR SC TR

Effect of branched gap synthesis parameters on mechanical properties of rocket propellants

One way to reduce smoke production in conventional rocket propellants is to replace the ammonium perchlorate oxidiser by another oxidiser that does not contain chlorine but which is less energetic, such as phase-stabilised ammonium nitrate, and to compensate the energy loss by using energetic polymers and plasticisers in the binder. This report describes research on the development of a rocket propellant with reduced smoke and low vulnerability based on glycidyl azide polymer (GAP) as a substitute for conventional hydroxy-terminated polybutadiene binder. The binder has a branched structure and is prepared by a novel one-step process involving the simultaneous degradation and azidation of a commercial rubber with sodium azide in the presence of a polyol and cleaving agent at elevated temperature in a polar organic solvent. The research reported examines how the variation of some branched GAP synthesis parameters, such as the polyol and the solvent, could improve the mechanical properties of propellants processed with this energetic polymer.

A frequently employed strategy for managing alertness of soldiers during sustained operations is to induce sleep before an operation, especially operations requiring prolonged travel. Previous studies on one sleep-inducing drug (triazolam) suggested that it might accelerate the onset of hypothermia in cold-water exposed individuals. This paper describes a study that evaluated the effect of triazolam on thermoregulatory responses to cold-water immersion. Eight subjects were immersed twice in 18-degree-C water for up to 90 minutes in the morning: once after ingesting 0.25 milligrams triazolam the prior evening, and again after placebo treatment. Results presented include metabolic heat production by the subjects, their rectal and skin temperature profiles, and average plasma concentrations of glycerol and free fatty acids, after treatment by triazolam and the placebo.

AVAST refers to a series of computer programs developed for the numerical prediction of the acoustic radiation and scattering from submerged elastic structures immersed in either finite-depth, half-space, or infinite fluid domains. AVAST combines both the finite element method for the structure and the boundary integral equation technique for the surrounding fluid. This report describes the development and incorporation of the latest enhancements to the AVAST code. The purpose of the work was to make the modelling of the elasto-acoustic interaction more realistic while ensuring that the code runs as efficiently as possible. To this end, several new features have been added, including the option to use the wet modes of the structure when generating the mobility matrix, the option to generate a structural impedance matrix based upon the mass, damping, and stiffness matrices, the implementation of a multi-frequency boundary integral equation method, decomposition of the current AVAST program modules in order to allow for restart analyses, implementation of a convergence acceleration technique for use in the calculation of the waveguide Green's function, incorporation of the hypersingular Burton and Miller boundary integral equation method, and the implementation of a coupling between the fluid and structural models for the transient case.

Schools, school boards, and even communities across Canada are recognising that they may no longer receive the same level of public support that they have traditionally enjoyed. Accordingly, the education system is increasingly considering, or already using, alternative funding sources as an institutionalised means of supplementing government funds. This report, based on a review of the literature and a survey of school boards, discusses the various alternative methods used for raising funds and resources, along with the ethical and legal issues raised by these methods. The methods reviewed include foundations and registered charities or trusts, business partnerships and corporate sponsorships, resource development offices, special events, grants, outreach services, supply contracts, community contributions, and advertising. The appendix presents examples of educational foundations and charities, business partnerships, and corporate sponsorships at various Canadian school boards, as well as policies governing their conduct.

The New Brunswick Dept. of Transportation has proposed to construct a new section of the Trans-Canada Highway between Fredericton and Salisbury in order to accommodate anticipated increases in traffic volumes and to replace the increasingly inadequate and accident-prone segment of the existing highway. This report presents the environmental assessment of the proposed highway, in accordance with the requirements of the Environmental Impact Assessment Regulation of the province's Clean Environment Act. The report first describes the proposed project and reviews alternatives (including the do-nothing alternative), and provides descriptions of the existing environment along the highway route, including topography, geology, terrestrial and aquatic environment components, air quality, and socio-economic setting. It then analyses potential impacts of the highway, along with proposed mitigation to offset those impacts, on groundwater, terrestrial resources, wetlands, aquatic resources, air quality, land use, the local and provincial economy, noise, and health and safety. Potential impacts on Canadian Forces Base Gagetown are also noted.

Estimated economic impacts and market potential associated with the development and production of fuel cells in British Columbia : project report

By Paul Levelton, Lisa Kershaw and William Reid. Victoria : Ministry of Environment, Lands & Parks, 1996. v, 45 p. : Ill.
MICROLOG 96-04183 (1 fiche)

This report evaluates the estimated economic impacts and potential market associated with the development and production in British Columbia of fuel cells for transportation applications. The focus of the study is on Ballard Power Systems, a global leader in the development of fuel cells and prototype transportation technologies. The report begins with a review of fuel cell technology and of the structure of the fuel cell industry both world-wide and in British Columbia. It then analyses the market outlook for fuel cell technologies, including an overview of trends in government legislation and motor vehicle manufacturing. Issues considered in relation to future market growth include the transportation market segments that will use fuel cells (notably buses and fleet vehicles), the effect of environmental legislation on the demand for alternative transportation systems, technological limitations, and trends in vehicle sales. Finally, the report estimates the potential economic impacts of fuel cell production in British Columbia using an input-output model. Both direct, indirect, and induced impacts are considered, as well as impacts on government taxation revenue. The appendix contains detailed descriptions of fuel cell manufacturers who are competing with Ballard and a detailed overview of input-output analysis.

Ce rapport est fondé sur des faits et des renseignements détaillés, qui ne sont pas commentés ni analysés. Le rapport se divise en trois parties. La première donne un bref aperçu de la méthodologie employée pour présenter l'information, et des principales caractéristiques des programmes de garantie des maisons neuves (sans but lucratif) offerts à la grandeur du pays. La deuxième partie décrit les objectifs de ces programmes, la portée de la garantie offerte ainsi que les diverses procédures inhérentes à chacun. La troisième partie du rapport fournit un aperçu statistique et financier des activités entreprises par les groupes chargés d'administrer les sept programmes affiliés au Conseil national de garantie des maisons neuves.

Le but de cette étude était d'évaluer l'importance de la fraude dans l'industrie de l'assurance automobile au Québec. Une enquête a été administrée auprès d'assureurs afin d'obtenir des données portant sur des fichiers de réclamations de dommages essentiellement matériels, excluant toutes les réclamations pour "bris de vitre seulement". Dix-huit (18) compagnies d'assurances représentant soixante-dix pour cent (70 %) du marché de l'assurance automobile ont participé à l'enquête. Ces entreprises ont accepté d'analyser en détail des dossiers de réclamations fermés afin de nous transmettre différentes informations utiles à l'évaluation de l'importance de la fraude à l'assurance. En particulier ces informations nous ont permis d'estimer le coût de la fraude durant la période avril 1994-mars 1995. Leur collaboration nous a également permis d'analyser certaines causes de la présence de la fraude et d'étudier les principaux indicateurs de celle-ci en assurance automobile.

Ce guide est le fruit de la collaboration entre le Centre de recherches pour le développement International et du Groupe de gestion Universalia. Son but premier est d'aider les gestionnaires de programmes du CRDI et d'autres à mieux comprendre les institutions partenaires du centre. Dans cette optique, il dresse un cadre conceptuel et une terminologie commune pour décrire les évaluations institutionnelles. Le cadre prend en compte quatre grandes dimensions : les forces-clés du contexte externe; la motivation organisationnelle; les composantes de la capacité organisationnelle et, les aspects de la performance organisationnelle. Pour chacune de ces dimensions, des considérations importantes sont suggérées à titre de point d'ancrage des évaluations organisationnelles.

Evaluation of a self-powered portable rock crusher : final report

By Michel LeBlond. Fredericton : Canadian Forest Service, Maritimes Region, 1995. 4 p.
MICROLOG 96-04036 (1 fiche)

FAHR Industries has developed a self-powered, mobile rock crusher for use in forest road maintenance applications. The crusher weighs about 6,400 kilograms, is powered by a 225-horsepower diesel engine, and can be mounted on the front of a loader. This report describes the crusher, called the Forester C-2000, its mode of operation, and results of field trials conducted on forest roads in 1994.

Recent research has resulted in the development of an underwater tracking system for use with sonobuoy data. This report uses real data to evaluate the tracking system based on narrowband emissions of a moving source. The tracking algorithm uses the conditional density functions to evaluate the possible locations for targets and to predict future position. This method differs from algorithms which try to estimate the source location directly, as it is able to localise gradually by eliminating sectors when possible. The method can automate many functions that a human operator might perform, leading to a more effective man-machine interaction. The real data used in the evaluation consisted of both narrowband Doppler-shifted frequency and bearing measurements. The evaluation strategy considered the following elements: measurement model validity; effect of density parameterisation, number-in-contact and volume effectively surveyed; noise correlation and posterior formation with memory limitation; and propagation, dynamic segment linking, and manoeuvre tolerance versus information loss. Performance measurement focuses mainly on reliability, although precision along the track is also considered to evaluate the volume effectively surveyed.

Evaluation of the regulations for lead and mercury content in paints : project report

Abt Associates of Canada. Ottawa : Consumer & Corporate Affairs, Product Safety Branch, 1991. 74 p.
MICROLOG 96-04371 (1 fiche)

Maximum lead content in interior liquid coatings is presently set at 0.5% by weight; for exterior use, lead levels are unrestricted although coatings with lead levels above 0.5% must meet labelling requirements. No regulations restrict mercury levels in liquid coatings, except those applied to children's products. Recent evidence suggests that current regulations may not adequately ensure the health and safety of consumers. This report assesses the costs and benefits of potential regulatory changes and other alternatives considered to limit exposure to lead and mercury from liquid coatings. It reviews current regulations and standards affecting the use of lead and mercury in liquid coatings, as well as the health concerns associated with lead- and mercury-containing coatings. Costs of reductions in the use of lead and mercury in liquid coatings were estimated from data obtained from a focus group of industry representatives and interviews with paint and coatings manufacturers. The main source of data on benefits of reductions in use of lead and mercury in liquid coatings is a survey of 200 consumers who were asked questions related to their willingness to pay for liquid coatings without those potential hazards.

Evaluation of the Valmet 701 and versatile prototype in plantation commercial thinning

By Gaetan Pelletier. S.I. : Canadian Forest Service, Maritimes Region, 1994. 25 p. : ill.
MICROLOG 96-04198 (1 fiche)

Single-grip harvesters are multi-functional machines that cut trees and process the bolts to length as a single operation. Some of their advantages are that slash is left on site at the stump and that all products are cut to length initially. In Canada, thinning of mid-rotation age plantations using full-size single-grip harvesters has had only mixed success. However, Scandinavian shortwood systems are using small single-grip harvesters specifically developed for thinning. This report describes field trials conducted to assess the performance of mini single-grip harvesters in spruce plantation commercial thinning in the Black Brook district of New Brunswick. The objectives of the trials were to evaluate damage levels when using both skilled and new operators, to measure machine productivity, assess feasibility of the harvesting systems, and propose modifications to the machines if necessary. Two harvesters were evaluated: the Valmet 701 from Sweden and a prototype machine built in

New Brunswick using a Ford Versatile 9030 bi-directional tractor as a carrier. Results of the trials and machine cost calculations are included.

The EXTECH program was initiated in 1989 to promote the development of new approaches to base metal exploration. EXTECH represents an integrated, multidisciplinary approach to mineral exploration research whose nominal goal is to develop an integrated deposit model. This volume describes the results of the first EXTECH project, implemented in the Snow Lake and Rusty Lake belts of northern Manitoba. The area is a highly productive base metal district that has the right combination of abundant outcrop, complex glacial stratigraphy, and well-documented mineral occurrences for the multidisciplinary studies envisioned for the project. The volume consists of a collection of project papers, three on the Rusty Lake subprogram and 13 on the Snow Lake subprogram. Topics of the papers include the geology of the Ruttan deposit, effects of acid mine effluent on sediment and water geochemistry, geologic settings of volcanic-hosted sulphide deposits, surface geochemistry, exploration geochemistry, vegetation geochemistry, a sediment survey, geophysical surveys, electrical properties of sulphide ore samples, and geographic information system modelling.

Factors influencing residential mobility among families with children living in a low-income area of Winnipeg, Manitoba

By Nancy C. Higgitt, Marjorie Fraser and Adrienne Whiteley. Ottawa : Canada Mortgage & Housing Corporation, 1994. xl, 152 p. : ill., Bibl.
MICROLOG 96-04157 (2 fiche)

Provides an in-depth analysis of 71 families with children living in rental housing in a low-income, inner-city neighbourhood of Winnipeg. The study explores how these families perceived their housing environment, their residential mobility, and the factors that influenced them. The investigation was motivated by the concern expressed by educators about the effects of residential mobility on children in terms of their academic and social development. The study develops a conceptual model consisting of categories of informants and their relationships, and generates profiles outlining the characteristics of different categories of persons according to locus of control, strength of anchor to the neighbourhood, strength and direction of life lines, strength and location of social networks, and degree to which groups belonged to the neighbourhood. The model illustrates how the groups differed in relation to each other and to the neighbourhood. The model can be used by planners, policy makers, and service providers to identify the characteristics of groups within a neighbourhood and to target the resources and requirements of each group.

The Policy clarifies the federal government's role in hosting and provides a transparent tool for the government to assess proposals against strict criteria. The Policy links federal support to only those events which can bring significant net sport, economic, social and cultural benefits to Canadians. This guide specifically looks at the following points: need for a policy; objectives of the policy; scope of the policy; tenets of the policy; principles; conditions; application procedures; and review procedures.

This assessment evaluates the potential of the proposed Halifax Harbour primary sewage treatment plant to meet the objective of the protection and improvement of human health. The assessment was made of a plant which would include an outfall within the inner harbour and a series of outlets designed to handle high flow conditions due to storm events. The assessment focuses on the potential human health effects of microbiological pathogenic organisms, chemical elements, and chemical compounds for three principal uses of the harbour: recreational use in which people have direct contact with the water; consumption of shellfish; and consumption of lobster. The analysis is based entirely on a thorough review of available information including scientific literature, the literature supporting the determination of regulatory compliance strategies in Canada and the United States, the environmental assessment of the placement of a secondary treatment facility in Boston Harbor, the available data on the quality of water and animal tissue from Halifax Harbour, and the data and conclusions of other researchers undertaking complementary studies of the proposed plant. The assessment includes hazard characterization, exposure assessment, dose-response assessment, risk characterization, a discussion of the assumptions used and their implications, and a prediction of the sewage treatment facility performance.

The objective of this report is to characterise the existing marine biological environment in the following two areas of Halifax Harbour: a farfield area extending from the harbour approaches up to and including Bedford Basin, and a nearfield inner harbour area in the most likely location for the proposed outfall/diffuser of a sewage plant. Field investigations included benthic grab sampling, diver transects, and macroalgal quadrat surveys; laboratory analyses provided information on species diversity, biomass, and community composition at specific surveyed sites. The report begins with a general description of the marine communities in the harbour, from microbes to fish and marine mammals. It then presents results of the studies of the farfield and nearfield sites, an assessment of existing baseline chemical body burden data, a comparison of these data with data from Boston Harbor, and an assessment of bioaccumulation, biomagnification, and disease related to wastewater-derived pollutants. Appendices include detailed field data.

This study was conducted in response to concerns about the input of contaminants to Halifax Harbour, and the resultant changes to this input and the state of the receiving environment, that would result from a proposed sewage treatment plant. The overall purpose of the study was to address the marine water and sediment quality of the Harbour and the short- and long-term variations in quality as they relate to the proposed plant with a diffuser outfall located in the central inner harbour. The study begins with a review of previous studies of water and sediment quality in the Harbour. It then presents results of field and laboratory research that included collection of water and sediment samples and subsequent analyses. Results include spatial and temporal variations in water and sediment quality, discussion of the release of metal and trace organics from sediments, and detailed analytical data in the appendices. Contaminants analysed include nutrients, metals, bacteria, suspended solids, hydrocarbons, pesticides, and polychlorinated and polycyclic organic compounds.

Halifax Harbour Cleanup is proposing to design and build a sewage collection and treatment system to service Halifax-Dartmouth, with a possible location for a regional sewage treatment plant at Ives Cove. Due to the lack of baseline noise data in the Halifax-Dartmouth area, this study was conducted to establish ambient noise levels at the plant site and in areas expected to be affected by the construction and operation of the proposed plant. Investigators selected seven locations for noise level measurements because of their proximity to project components, and made estimates of noise levels expected to be associated with construction and operation activities. These estimates were compared with noise measurements at the seven sites and with Nova Scotia Dept. of Environment guidelines.

Summarises the technical findings and accomplishments of the Space-Based Radar Signal Processing Demonstrator (SBR SPD) project. The SPD is a laboratory-based computer system for the demonstration and validation of radar signal processing algorithms and real-time digital signal processing hardware for SBR. The SPD consists of two subsystems: a digital signal processor (DSP) which implements the SBR signal processing algorithms on high-speed programmable hardware and a testbed that provides the computer environment required to operate, test, and demonstrate the DSP. The principal technical achievements are reviewed in sections covering baseline SBR designs and algorithm innovations, DSP architecture, testbed development, and functions and performance achieved. Discrepancies between expected and actual performance are noted along with potential improvements to the system and technology gaps that need to be addressed. The final section discusses future work involving the SPD as applied to SBR, suggested enhancements and new SPD capabilities, extension of the SPD to other radar systems and applications, and experiments that explore the key issues faced by any practical SBR. Includes a glossary and list of acronyms and abbreviations used in the project. The appendix contains an index to the project contract deliverables and a comparison of predicted and actual software source

The purpose of this plan is to identify and prioritise tourism development initiatives for Prince Edward Island, and to provide policy direction to the federal and provincial governments on the roles they should play in furthering such development. The plan document first analyses the growth, performance, and competitive position of the province's tourism industry, including visitation patterns, comparisons with other Atlantic provinces, and strengths and weaknesses of the industry. It then examines major tourism trends that will affect the province, including demographic changes, competition, the length of vacations, and the quest for experiential vacations. The impacts of the fixed link to the island on tourism are also explored. Subsequent sections present the overall strategic framework of the action plan, an analysis of accommodation infrastructure and recommended development strategies, attractions and infrastructure product development strategies and opportunities, marketing and packaging strategies, service quality enhancement strategies, and actions to strengthen government/industry partnerships. The final chapter contains an implementation plan and actions for monitoring and evaluation of the plan. Appendices

These institutions exist mainly to serve people who have been bypassed or who have side-stepped the mainstream educational system, such as those with low literacy skills, those whose family environments have discouraged attendance or completion of basic schooling, the handicapped, Aboriginals, and those living in isolated communi-

The review task force gathered information through public meetings at each college and through invited submissions from the colleges, other post-secondary institutions, community agencies, and the general public. The task force reviewed submissions against defined criteria, extracted themes reflective of underlying concerns, and identified broad dimensions that emerged from the public meetings, all in order to develop recommendations. Themes covered in the review findings include the value of the AVCs to their clients, their families, and communities; the core activities of the AVCs; impediments to effective AVC management; and economic benefits of AVCs. The review concludes with task force recommendations on improving AVC governance. The appendices include AVC student stories and summaries of student, faculty, management, and community views heard at each of the four AVCs.

Forests in eastern Canada are currently undergoing fragmentation due to intensive harvest levels. This study evaluates the hypothesis that fragments of mature forest in a managed-forest landscape are suboptimal habitat for forest-interior birds compared to large tracts of similar forest. The study was conducted in and around Fundy National Park in southern New Brunswick and tested the specific hypothesis that mating success of male ovenbirds would be lower on fragments than on contiguous forest sites. The investigators also compared the rates of occurrence of all bird species encountered on fragments and contiguous forest, and examined food availability on ovenbird territories in fragments and contiguous forest.

The conventional view of the law that governs a landlord and tenant dispute has been the law of property rather than the law of contract. Two principles of the law of contracts which traditionally have not been applied to commercial tenancies are those of fundamental breach of contract and frustration of contract. This report examines those principles with the goal of determining whether commercial tenancy law in Manitoba is in need of reform with respect to those matters. It begins with a discussion of the current provincial law, followed by a discussion of problems in that law and how they might be reformed. Ancillary issues discussed include relief from forfeiture for tenant and others claiming under tenant, preservation of derivative interests by the landlord, the landlord's liability for the tenant's mortgage, relief to landlords on termination by tenant, and rights of holders of derivative interests of tenant. The report also sets out proposals for reform of the Landlord and Tenant Act, along with explanatory notes. Recommendations for reform are given throughout the report. MICROLOG 96-04160 (1 fiche)

This paper is intended to give a broad overview of the views that potential first-home buyers and other Canadians have towards housing and urban communities by examining their opinions about housing as an investment, and the impact of the fiscal situation, the new economy, and the environment on housing decisions. Specific issues examined included the importance of house price increases, the use of money invested in a home to support retirement income, consumer confidence, awareness of interest rates, perceived barriers to home ownership, intentions to buy, ability to purchase a home, the appeal of home-based work, importance of home energy efficiency, and degree of preference for new homes.

Ce document donne un vaste survol de l'opinion des accédants à la propriété potentiels et des autres canadiens sur le logement et les collectivités urbaines, en examinant leur opinion sur les logements comme investissement, l'impact de la situation fiscale, la nouvelle économie et l'environnement sur les décisions concernant le logement. Cette étude apporte spécifiquement des réponses aux questions suivantes : dans quelle mesure les accédants à la propriété potentiels considèrent-ils que le logement constitue un bon investissement; comment ces acheteurs se voient-ils touchés par la fiscalité; que signifie la "nouvelle économie" pour les accédants à la propriété potentiels; et, que pensent-ils des logements du point de vue environnemental.

In 1995, the federal government adopted a policy requiring federal departments and agencies to conduct gender-based analysis of future policies and legislation, where appropriate. This guide is a "hands-on" working document developed by Status of Women Canada to assist in the implementation of this government-wide policy. It is part of a pilot project designed to begin the implementation of this form of analysis over a period of five years. The guide is divided into three sections. The first one defines key concepts and provides the rationale for gender-based analysis. The second outlines a commonly accepted policy analysis process and highlights how sensitivity to gender can be integrated into this process. The third section offers a step-by-step process for gender-based analysis.

Globalization and the production of new urban spaces : Pacific Rim mega-projects in the late 20th century

By Kris Olds. Vancouver, BC : University of British Columbia, Centre for Human Settlements ; School of Community & Regional Planning, 1996. ii, 38 p. : Maps, Bibl. (AURN WP / Asian Urban Research Network ; #9 ISSN 1190-8971) At head of title: Asian Urban Research Network. MICROLOG 96-04354 (1 fiche) (Available on fiche only)

Examines the complex, increasingly global processes underlying the production of contemporary urban megaprojects (UMPs) in the Pacific Rim. The UMP development process is of interest because it can be viewed as a microcosm of broader processes which are impacting cities throughout the world. The paper provides a brief overview of the key dimensions of globalisation processes, including the development and restructuring of the international financial system; globalisation of property markets; changing roles of the transnational corporation; the stretching of social relations, world social networks, and epistemic communities; and travelling and networking. The contemporary urban development trends in the Pacific Rim Basin are then outlined to provide a context for UMP development. The paper examines three UMPs: Pacific Place in Vancouver, Minato Mirai 21 in Yokohama, and Lujiazui Central Area in Shanghai, to reveal complexities of globalisation processes and the global-local dialectic. Attention is focused on international linkages and global context in influencing the production of these new urban spaces, which are often designed at extraordinary expense to symbolise a global urban utopia for the 21st century.

The recent upsurge of interest in corporate governance issues in Canada and other industrial countries is a reflection of the recognition of the rising importance of corporate governance for strong economic performance of firms and nations. The corporate governance debate in Canada and other countries to date, however, has mainly concentrated on the role of the board of directors in ensuring shareholders' interests and the minimization of agency costs. This document specifically looks at governance structure, corporate decision-making and firm performance in North America. Topics covered are: the governance systems in Canada and the United States; analytical framework; and, empirical results.

Si les projections sont exactes, ce chiffre passera à 4,5 millions au tournant du siècle. On se rend compte que plus les personnes vivent longtemps, plus elles peuvent devenir dépendantes de leurs enfants; aussi, cette période de dépendance sera de plus longue durée que la période pendant laquelle les enfants ont dépendu de leurs parents. Nous ne savons pas exactement dans quelle mesure des personnes âgées subissent des mauvais traitements au Canada, mais nous estimons qu'environ un demi million à 2,5 millions de personnes âgées pourraient être chaque année. Ce guide se penche précisément sur la prévention de la violence familiale.

The Hedonic approach and the rental market : an application to the Quebec region

By François Des Rosiers. Ottawa : Canada Mortgage & Housing Corporation, 1994. 59 p. : Bilingual.
MICROLOG 96-04094 (1 fiche)

This document summarises the findings of recent research on the structure of the rental market in the Quebec area for 1989-92, focusing on five spatial submarkets of the region (Quebec City, Vanier, Ste-Foy, Beauport, and Charlesbourg). Data used in the research was obtained from property owners via a systematic survey covering 70-75% of the rental stock in selected municipalities of the region. The data provide detailed information on building and apartment size, age, location, services provided, quality of premises, and type of occupants. Vacancy rates can be derived from the data bank, and resorting to a geographic information system allows integration of neighbourhood effects into the analysis. The first part of the document analyses the Charlesbourg rental market of 1991, with three submarkets determined on the basis of average neighbourhood rent, unit size, and building density. The second part emphasises spatial segmentation and collinearity issues. The investigators determined stable hedonic prices for main rental services at a regional level using a regression-based paired comparison approach, then developed service-adjusted local equations.

A Historical series of agricultural statistics for Alberta : selected statistics from the Census of Agriculture

By Barbara Pekalski. Edmonton : Alberta Agriculture, Food & Rural Development, Market Analysis & Statistics Branch, 1995. iii, 33 p. : ill.
MICROLOG 96-04211 (1 fiche)

The purpose of this publication is to highlight and analyse the major trends and patterns of agriculture in Alberta since 1900. The sole source of information is the Statistics Canada Census of Agriculture. Results of analyses are presented in the form of tables and graphs including highlights from 1901 to 1991, where available. Only certain topics are presented for that whole period: population, farm land area, use of farm land, number of farms and farm tenure, area of major field crops, number of livestock on farms, and farm capital. Other topics such as land management practices, agricultural labour, gross farm receipts, farm type, and farm operating arrangements, are analysed from 1971 to 1991. Depending on availability of data, some tables include statistics from 1911 or 1921. A brief history of the Census of Agriculture is included, followed by selected census definitions and highlights of Alberta agriculture.

Housing a diverse society : access and affordability issues for Canada

By Greg Mason. Ottawa : Canada Mortgage & Housing Corporation, 1995. ii, 36 p. : Bibl. French ed. (Loger une société diverse...) on the same fiche. Presented to a CMHC Symposium of Housing Affordability.
MICROLOG 96-04144 (1 fiche)

As our society becomes more diverse, housing must meet the needs of many varied households and individuals. The orientation of this paper is one of defining a research agenda as a basis for policy action. It has several goals, namely to answer the following sets of questions: why is it important to examine the issue of diversity in society; are there significant access gaps for different groups in Canadian society and how have recent social and economic trends affected affordability and access?; what options exist for Canada's housing partners to determine the extent of the problem? how have other countries detected and dealt with access gaps; and what are some possible next steps for research?

Housing, health and environment : Healthy Communities Project : final report

Ottawa : Canada Mortgage & Housing Corporation, 1995. 132 p. : ill., Bibl.
MICROLOG 96-04146 (2 fiche)

Describes a project implemented to increase awareness of environmental and health issues in social housing in Prince Edward Island. The project aimed to give people knowledge and skills that they need to gain control over air pollution, water pollution, and toxic substances within their home, and to reinforce the connection between these issues and wider issues such as global warming and ozone depletion. Implementation involved co-operation among Canada Mortgage and Housing, Environment Canada, other federal and provincial organisations, the health sector, and numerous volunteers. The project included workshops which covered such topics as energy conservation, air quality, waste reduction, environmentally responsible construction and maintenance practices, and the environment/health link. The appendix contains workshop module materials and results of pre- and post-workshop surveys of project participants examining their knowledge of environmental issues primarily related to the home and living habits.

The purpose of this manual is to provide initial direction for those local trail sponsors that will be involved in developing and managing sections of Sentier NB Trail. A local trail sponsor is a local group that agrees to design, build, and maintain a section of the trail according to the standards and objectives of the provincial trail. The manual focuses on information on establishing an effective group, committee, or team; developing a mission and planning process necessary to energise volunteers; forming a strategic direction for all to follow; taking action towards realising the group's goals; and sustaining the trail section as a recognisable and successful part of the provincial trail system. Specific sections of the manual contain information on such topics as land ownership and acquisition, principles of the trail system, trail management, financing the trail, gaining community and regional support, and marketing the trail.

Illumination system for a time-integrating correlator

By N. Brousseau and J.W. Salt. Ottawa : Defence Research Establishment Ottawa, 1995. xiii, 16 p. : ill., Bibl. (Technical note / Defence Research Establishment Ottawa ; 95-8)
MICROLOG 96-04287 (1 fiche)

Time-integrating correlators (TICs) are analogue optical computers designed to compare signals in applications such as DNA analysis, spread-spectrum signal processing, and searches in large unstructured databases. One of the critical requirements for a TIC is the capability to produce correlation peaks of uniform height on the whole width of its aperture. This requirement imposes important constraints on the illumination system. In addition, the intensity of the illumination has to be varied with the integration time and signal strength in order to avoid saturation of the detector array, and phase errors have to be kept under control to maintain the quality of the output signal. This paper presents the design and performance of the illumination system for a tandem TIC. The paper analyses the requirements for the illumination system, then describes the subsystems of the illumination system (the beam attenuator, beam expander, and beam splitter) are explained and experimental results of their performance are presented. The light budget of the illumination system is also calculated.

MICROLOG 96-04088 (2 fiche)

This study assesses and compares the cost-effectiveness of two patterns of development: a conventional suburban development pattern and a mixed-use, more compact development planned according to the principles of new urbanism. The analysis considers the long-term life-cycle costs of various linear infrastructure and community services. Life-cycle costs include the emplacement costs, replacement costs, and operating and maintenance costs over a 75-year period. The study differentiates between public and private (developer) costs, and its scope is limited only to infrastructure costs. The suburban development pattern was selected to be representative of conventional suburban development in Ottawa-Carleton, with such characteristics as homogeneity and separation of land uses, curvilinear road patterns, emphasis on private automobile use, and residential densities typical of recent developments. The features of the alternative plan include clearly defined neighbourhoods, higher net residential densities, a finer mix of land uses, more emphasis on public transit and walking or cycling, reduced setbacks for buildings, and a greater range of housing types. The study discusses the reasons for the differences in costs between the two patterns and discusses the implications for community planning.

Reviews three case histories of biological control of forest insect pests by means of introduction of parasite species. The first case, control of the European spruce sawfly (Gilpinia hercyniae) between 1933 and 1951, illustrates the value of considering several different kinds of natural enemies for achieving control. The second case, control of the mountain ash sawfly (Pristiphora geniculata) by a parasitic wasp, illustrates the careful experimental work required, including the collection of suitable parasites in Europe and the measured release of parasites in caged trees. The third case involves the larch sawfly (Pristiphora erichsonii) demonstrates the dynamic nature of host-parasite relationships and the need for continuing monitoring to ensure ongoing pest management.

Investigation on the evaluation of fibers by a non-destructive mapping technique : final report

By Pierre Bernard and Alain Charlebois. Valcartier, PQ : Defence Research Establishment Valcartier, 1992. 92 p. : ill.
MICROLOG 96-04282 (2 fiche)

Describes the first phase of research on a technique to study the transmission and backscattering of submillimetric wavelengths in clouds of metallic fibres under well-controlled laboratory conditions, and to correlate those results with a theoretical model. The investigators studied two types of fibres, steel and aluminium. They distributed the fibres on a transparent substrate, digitised images of the samples, and analysed the images by computer to provide the exact position, length, and orientation of each fibre. They measured the transmission and backscattering of these samples using an optically pumped carbon dioxide waveguide laser as the beam source, at different wavelengths from 400 to 1300 micrometres. A vector radiative transfer model was used to compare theory and experimental results. Shortcomings in the sample fabrication technique are discussed. The appendix includes listings of the computer programs used to calculate the transmission and scattering intensities. For the second phase report, see fiche 96-04109.

Papers in this volume are from a symposium on issues associated with a national presence in Canadian educational systems. The papers provide an overview of the rich and multi-faceted dimensions that guide and challenge Canadian educators in the current national policy debate. The first paper argues in favour of the traditional decentralised system of education, with a national role accomplished through initiation of dialogue and promotion of greater coherence at all levels. The second argues for a more legitimised and formalised national role in education, particularly as it relates to the federal government. The third explores the possibility of a common educational purpose in Canada and draws conclusions relating to culture, purpose, and curriculum. The final paper explores the critical linkages between economics and education, notably the relationship between educational levels and economic prosperity.

By Commonwealth Historic Resource Management Limited... et al. Victoria : Ministry of Municipal Affairs, Recreation & Culture, Heritage Conservation Branch, 1990. iii, 222 p. : ill., Maps, Bibl.

The intent of this study is to document the history of the Kootenay and to inventory the region's significant heritage resources as a basis for identifying opportunities for heritage tourism. The contextual history treats both the prehistory and post-contact history of the Kootenay and traces the development of key themes: settlement, mining and smelting, forestry, agriculture, hydroelectric power, and recreation. The inventory of heritage resources presented in the study comprises a wide range of existing and potential attractions including museums, heritage districts, historic buildings, roadside stops, archaeological sites, and historic trails. The inventory was entered into a computer database, a listing of which is included. The study also received public input on suggestions for tourism opportunities; a copy of a survey questionnaire and a summary of ideas received are appended. The study process identified two categories of heritage tourism opportunities: regional strategies and specific opportunities tied to localised heritage resources and communities. The latter opportunities are discussed in terms of the existing and potential resources associated with them and the constraints and priorities for their implementation. Finally, the study discusses the relationship between the heritage tourism opportunities and the overall tourism development strategy being advocated by the British Columbia Task Force on Parks, Recreation and Tourism.

Summarises research investigating the effects of back pressure, viscosity, and free gas content on the pumping efficiency of sucker rod pumps oriented at inclined angles from vertical to horizontal. Investigators performed 206 experimental tests, using different combinations of the parameters of interest, in a working sucker rod pump model that has the pump barrel and valve cages constructed of Plexiglas to allow direct visual observation of the fluid flow and component operation within the pump. The pump was set up in a flow loop with associated instrumentation to monitor, control, and record pressures, flow rate, pump speed, position, and load. Pumping performance was analysed through visual observation of the working components, with recording of operation on video tape and preparation of dynamometer cards for each test. Results presented include the conditions under which reverse fluid slippage occurs, the reasons for such slippage, the conditions that created hydraulic shock waves in the pump, and the effect of the presence of gas on the slippage of fluids.

This report provides information on the composition and abundance of zooplankton species in seven lakes in the Experimental Lakes Area of north-western Ontario during the open water seasons of 1991 through 1993. It extends information originally gathered between 1987 and 1990 as part of the Natural Variability study. The investigators maintained zooplankton sampling frequency and protocols throughout the entire study. The report presents a unique measure of natural variation in biological diversity and community dynamics in unperturbed lakes with different water renewal times and morphometries. These data will improve evaluation of aquatic ecosystem responses to anthropogenic impacts or experimental modification.

This report archives information on the species composition, abundance, and biomass of the crustacean plankton communities found in six lakes in the Red Lake district of north-west Ontario during the open water periods of 1991 through 1993 and for lakes Nipigon and Superior during 1991. It extends the initial database on zooplankton gathered from these lakes 1987-89. The bulk of the report consists of data tables giving abundance (individuals per litre) and biomass (net weight per litre), by species and their life stages. The introduction reviews the field and laboratory methods used. Graphs showing weighted seasonal mean zooplankton biomass are also included.

Dans le cadre de l'élaboration et de la mise en oeuvre de sa stratégie visant la réduction du tabagisme, le ministère de la Santé et des Services sociaux entend proposer un renforcement de l'intervention législative concernant ce problème de santé publique. C'est pour alimenter cette dynamique que ce document a été rédigé. Son contenu fait d'abord état du profil du tabagisme au Québec. Par la suite, l'impact du tabagisme sur la santé est abordé. Suit une analyse du développement du comportement tabagique. Puis, les fondements de l'intervention législative en général sont présentés avant que les mesures précises soumises à la consultation soient discutées dans la principale section du document.

Lichens are a conspicuous component of many British Columbia ecosystems, and often play an important role in maintenance of ecosystem health. Lichens are also useful to wildlife and to humans. This report reviews the importance of lichens, the status of lichen research in British Columbia, and previous lichen research. It then lists rare and/or endangered lichen species by biogeoclimatic zone, ranks biogeoclimatic zones and ecoregions according to the number of reported rare lichen species, lists imperiled and rare lichen species with notes on their ecology, distribution, and vulnerability, makes recommendations for future lichen inventory and research in the province, outlines potential threats to lichens, and describes simple inventory techniques for use in lichen research. The appendix includes a list of important lichen collections in British Columbia, a directory of experts on lichen taxonomy, and a list of rare or infrequent rock- and soil-dwelling lichens not discussed in the main text.

Brucellosis is a debilitating disease that can cause abortions and weight loss in animals, as well as various diseases in humans. The lack of vaccines to protect against brucellosis, which has also been seriously considered by some countries as a biological warfare weapon, prompted research to develop an effective vaccine. This report presents results of research that produced a novel purified polysaccharide vaccine for protection against Brucella abortus in mice and guinea pigs and against Brucella suis in swine. It also describes production of 150,000 human equivalent doses of the vaccine for research and experimental purposes, and includes description of a procedure for outer polysaccharide vaccine extraction.

The study focuses on the neighbourhoods of Kitsilano-Point Grey, Kitsilano-Bayview, and Central Kitsilano. Based on a review of census data, a survey of local resident housing experiences, interviews with key informants, and examination of local planning documents, the study outlines the major changes to the social structure and built environment of the three neighbourhoods. Local resident perceptions and experiences are used to develop a greater understanding of how revitalisation has changed the neighbourhood. The study also includes a review of the literature on the revitalisation of inner city housing. The appendix contains a copy of the housing survey questionnaire.

Describes a study in which investigators determined tree and log characteristics, wood properties, visually graded lumber yields, and machine stress rated lumber yields for 95-year-old lodgepole pine (Pinus contorta Dougl. var. latifolia Engelm.) trees on good sites in south-eastern British Columbia. They selected a total of 220 trees stratified by diameter at breast height (DBH) and obtained samples which represented end-of-rotation densities of 700, 1100, and 1900 live stems per hectare. Logs were sawn to maximise the yield of wide dimension lumber. Results presented include tree sample statistics such as DBH and height, lumber recovery factors, lumber dimension yields, lumber grade yields (including grade-limiting defects, the relation between knot size and DBH, and relations between selected structural lumber yields and log top diameter), lumber strength and stiffness, and kiln drying degrade.

Tout d'abord, des études de cas ont permis de repérer des modèles qui ont fait leurs preuves et d'en étudier les éléments. Dans les pages de ce document, les études de cas servent à élaborer un ensemble de principes de conception qui caractérisent l'habitation adaptée à la famille. L'étude porte sur onze cas, dont des logements sans but lucratif et des logements du marché de tout le Canada de même que plusieurs ensembles d'habitation européens. Les cas ont été choisis au moyen des ouvrages publiés et en consultation avec les principaux experts sur le logement du Canada. On y décrit une série de cinq caractéristiques distinctives des logements adaptés aux familles au moyen d'exemples tirés des études de cas.

Low cost detector of formaldehyde and ionizable VOCs (TVOC) for the homeowner and home inspector

By George Vandrish and Lyle Davidson. Ottawa : Canada Mortgage & Housing Corporation, 1994. 73 p. : ill. Bibl.
MICROLOG 96-04103 (2 fiche)

Reviews the literature relating to the measurement of indoor air pollutants (formaldehyde and volatile organics), with the goal of identifying simple, low-cost methods of measurement applicable to use in inexpensive portable detectors. Focuses on two methods, one based on a heated platinum catalyst and a second based on ultraviolet light. These methods produce ionised molecules only in the presence of organic materials and, when combined with a low-cost ion detector such as an electro-scope, provide the basis for sensitive and inexpensive detectors for formaldehyde and volatile organic compounds. Also describes a research project on the development and testing of several portable detectors based on the platinum catalyst and vacuum ultraviolet source-electroscope combinations. Test results of prototype detectors are included, and several modifications are proposed which should increase detector sensitivity and lower the minimum detectable level.

Managing uncertainty in digital geographical information : survey of technology, phase 1 final report

WaterMark Industries Inc. Courcette, PQ : Defence Research Establishment Valcartier, 1995. 37 p. : Bibl.
MICROLOG 96-04139 (1 fiche)

The rapid growth in geographic information systems (GIS), their applications, and data sharing and exchange activities have created a requirement to standardise data transfer formats for GIS information. A data transfer standard called DIGEST (Digital Geographic Information Exchange Standard) has been designed to enable transfer of digital geographic information among nations, and applies to both civilian and military applications. Data quality information is one of the elements found in DIGEST, allowing users to evaluate the quality of exchanged geographical data and to integrate the data into a receiving database without ambiguity. However, few existing GIS provide tools for data quality management. This report documents the first phase of a project to identify and understand the real and perceived market requirements for uncertainty management with respect to digital geographic information. It describes a literature review and a user needs survey that solicited information from over 160 data suppliers, GIS vendors, data users, and experienced DIGEST users. The survey identified several issues of importance to digital geographic data users and assessed the ability of the current version of DIGEST to address those issues.

In the 1980's there was a noticeable decline in affordable rental housing and the transition to homeownership grew increasingly difficult for renters. Declines in real renter incomes and increases in rents and house prices have caused many families to spend a greater proportion of their incomes on shelter and made homeownership an increasingly distant dream. The purpose of this paper is to make an argument for developing a set of measures of the regulatory environment in Canadian municipalities within the context of the problem of housing affordability. Topics covered are: developing measures of municipal regulations; the effects of municipal regulation on affordability; measuring affordability in Canadian cities; and, trends in affordability and evidence on the effects of regulations.

The investigators used 55 samples from three locations in the Northwest Territories to examine genetic variation in stocks from the same geographic region. They also examined two Arctic char morphs known to exist within Lake Hazen. Samples from four additional stocks obtained from lineages maintained at the Rockwood Aquaculture Research Centre in Manitoba were used to examine variation among widespread geographic regions. The stocks included 14 samples from two Northwest Territories locations, eight from Labrador, and six European samples from Norway.

Les Moisissures dans les maisons, raisons de leur prolifération et raisons de nos préoccupations : Wallaceburg, phase II : rapport définitif

Morrison Hershfield Consulting Engineers. Ottawa : Société canadienne d'hypothèques et de logement, Division de la recherche, 1995. ii, 84 p. : Ill., Bibl. L'éd. anglaise (Moldy houses, why they are...) : 96-04102/1. MICROLOG 96-04148 (1 fiche)

Ce rapport de recherche résume l'un des produits finaux de l'étude visant à cueillir et à analyser des données concernant les différences entre les maisons à forte prolifération de moisissures et celles à faible prolifération, ainsi que les différences dans certains indicateurs de la santé chez l'un des enfants vivant dans chacune de ces maisons. L'analyse des données effectuée à ce jour n'est que préliminaire, et on procède actuellement à d'autres travaux d'analyse pour mieux comprendre ce qui découle des constatations de l'étude. On y interprète les données avec prudence car un travail vraiment complexe est nécessaire pour saisir toute la portée des résultats obtenus.

Moldy houses, why they are and why we care : final report

Morrison Hershfield Consulting Engineers. Ottawa : Canada Mortgage & Housing Corporation, Research Division, 1995. 11, 66 p. French ed. (Les Moisissures dans les maisons...) : 96-04148/1. MICROLOG 96-04102 (1 fiche)

A previous study carried out in Wallaceburg, Ontario measured biologically active contaminants in houses and explored the health of occupants. This report describes phase two of a project that selected a group of houses from that study with the worst levels of biological contamination and those with the least, for more detailed investigation. The houses were subjected to detailed field inspections, testing to determine house operating parameters, monitoring of indoor environmental conditions, and simulation to predict condensation formation potential in winter conditions. The investigators gained subjective measures of health through questionnaires and brief physical exams; objective measures were explored by collection of blood and nasal secretion samples for lymphocyte analyses. The results indicate the degree of correlation between measurements of mould growth and immunological reactions of occupants and the relationship of local moisture sources or ventilation levels to mould growth.

Monitoring of cavity humidity levels at Canada Life Building

Ottawa : Canada Mortgage & Housing Corporation, 1995. vi, 22 p. : ill. French ed. (Contrôle des taux d'humidité...) : 96-04167/1. MICROLOG 96-04097 (1 fiche)

The new Canada Life Building in Toronto is of special interest since its envelope incorporates specific design and construction details intended to promote cavity pressure equalisation. This report describes a field monitoring study of humidity levels in the rainscreen wall cavity of the Canada Life Building, conducted to assess the wall's moisture intake and drying potential when subjected to rain. The investigators instrumented two wall panels for measuring rainfall intensity, relative humidity, temperature, and barometric pressure in order to answer the following questions: how much rain is exposed to the panel surface, whether rain is penetrating the cavity, and how quickly the cavity dries if it gets wet. The report includes humidity ratio curves for each wall cavity and for both the exterior and interior environments, plotted before, during, and after a rainfall. The report also presents a simple approach for estimating the quantity of residual rain water which penetrated the rainscreen cladding.

Presents results of health assessments of adult mountain whitefish collected from two reaches of the Columbia River and one reference site on the Stocan River in British Columbia. The research is part of a program designed to assess improvements anticipated to follow changes in manufacturing processes and upgrading of effluent treatment systems at a pulp mill near Castlegar and at a smelter-fertiliser complex at Trail. Results from the two Columbia River sites, located downstream from Castlegar and Trail, are compared to results from the reference site, which is unaffected by industrial activities. Observations reported include incidences of stress-related abnormalities, tissue concentrations of dioxins and furans, concentrations of polychlorinated biphenyl congeners, mixed function oxidase levels, and levels of heavy metals and metal-binding proteins.

The purpose of this publication is to illustrate the mortality rates for certain largely preventable diseases affecting seniors in Canada. Its intention is to facilitate the detection of high-risk urban areas and any general patterns of disease distribution. From this, hypotheses concerning underlying causal factors can be formed and tested, possibly leading to the development of control measures to reduce both morbidity and mortality. The geographic distribution of seniors' mortality in Canadian census metropolitan areas and census agglomerations was demonstrated by a series of 35 maps based on statistical analyses of mortality during the period 1986-1991.

National Building Code enforcement, Province of Newfoundland and Labrador : final report

D.W. Knight Associates Ltd. Ottawa : Canada Mortgage & Housing Corporation, 1995. 38 p. MICROLOG 96-04158 (1 fiche)

The purpose of this study was to assess the level of National Building Code (NBC) enforcement in Newfoundland, and to evaluate the enforcement capabilities and related technical training needs. The study methodology included a survey of municipalities across the province which have adopted the NBC and of private firms offering a building inspection service. In addition, consultations were completed with a selection of resource persons. Based on the survey findings, the study reaches conclusions about the potential to provide NBC-related training to larger and smaller municipalities in the province and to certain target markets on a fee-for-service basis. The study ends with recommendations.

tions related to increasing awareness about the need for quality housing, providing adequate inspection services, and other issues. Appendices include a table showing the level of NBC adoption for each municipality and a summary of the survey results.

Contains four discussion papers focusing on four themes which emerge within the new policies of the Klein government in Alberta: competitiveness, restructuring of health care, redefinition of the collective, and accountability in government. The discussions address the implications of these themes for persons with disabilities. These implications include the potential to exclude persons with disabilities from participation in society, the potential to create a permanent underclass, and the potential to ration health care resources inappropriately. Challenges addressed in the discussions include the renewal of community and the reaffirmation of Alberta's core values, the challenge of employment and public policy, the role of the private sector in social responsibility, health care reform, and the decline of government intervention.

The paper covers both one- and three-dimensional methods, as well as two-phase flow equations and their solution by two-step and three-dimensional methods. The paper ends with a re-

Opportunities and constraints for urban agriculture in Bandung, Indonesia

This study first presents an introduction to urban agriculture, especially as it appears in developing countries. The subsequent chapter discusses urban planning and food policy in Indonesia, which provides a context for the consideration of urban food production in Bandung, the third largest city in the country. This research meets two major objectives: first, in response to the need expressed in the literature for clearer definitions under the heading of urban agriculture, it develops a definition and typology of urban food production in the context of Bandung. Second, the research identifies opportunities and constraints for urban food production in Bandung, which is threatened by the increasing degree of urbanisation of the area and by competition with other urban activities.

Organic and ecological grounds maintenance for multiple housing

By Marius Ols. Ottawa : Canada Mortgage & Housing Corporation, 1995. lii, 77 p. : Bibl. MICROLOG 96-04096 (1 fiche)

This document examines conventional grounds maintenance practices and reports on new methods of maintaining the grounds for housing developments. Emphasis is on sustainable, ecological maintenance which will promote healthy landscapes and prolong the life of the built landscape. The document lists and analyses current information on various maintenance approaches and discusses the factors that determine the new approach, including energy efficiency, water conservation, reducing or eliminating environmental pollutants, and recycling. It also explains the principles of ecological grounds maintenance and describes the organic and non-hazardous alternatives used in the ecological approach, including procedures for soil improvement, pest and disease control, composting, road and pavement maintenance, and plant care. The appendix includes a review of the impact and results of ecological maintenance practices in a German city, a list of organic products available in Canada, and an outline of the Metropolitan Toronto Housing Company organic landscape maintenance program.

The Outlook for population and employment in the GTA

Hemson Consulting Ltd., the Coopers & Lybrand Consulting Group. Toronto : Office for the Greater Toronto Area, 1993. 97 p. : Ill. MICROLOG 96-04406 (2 fiches)

The report begins with a discussion of recent trends in the Greater Toronto Area (GTA) in terms of population, housing activity, and employment. It then discusses external forces affecting growth in the GTA, including the position of the GTA in the global marketplace, the changing nature of the workplace, and the population age structure and evolving development patterns within the GTA. Forecasts of population, housing, and employment are presented for the next 30 years and the following decade, using available 1991 Census information as a starting point. Key assumptions for the forecast model are based on the economic outlook, and the forecast process begins with a standard population forecast with inputs for fertility, mortality, and migration. The migration input is the most sensitive and is based on the economic and employment outlook as well as federal government policy. It is determined using a household- and housing-based model. Three sets of forecasts are included: reference, low, and high, the latter two assuming a restrictive and an open immigration policy respectively. Separate discussion is provided of the growth outlook for the GTA hinterland and for the areas in the GTA where the growth is likely to be accommodated. The report concludes with a discussion of the implications of alternative regional growth distributions on the population and employment forecasts at the regional level.

In Canada, the practice of paying men and women different rates of pay was made illegal when the Canadian Human Rights Act came into effect in 1978. The Act promotes and requires equal opportunity for men and women. In economic terms, this means wages must be fairly paid to both sexes. The requirement is set out in Section 11 of the Act, which calls for "equal pay for work of equal value". Pay equity is now official policy in 10 of 13 Canadian jurisdictions, although provisions vary. This casebook describes the most important cases which have come before the Canadian Human Rights Commission. The examples show where wages have been adjusted or where the complaint that wage policies were discriminatory was dismissed. Where appropriate, the significance of each case is explained.

This report investigates the impact that telework and home-based employment has on the use of the home and neighbourhood, and the implications for the planning and design of homes and communities. The investigation included a mail-out survey that obtained detailed data on household characteristics, work profiles of the home-based worker, community context of the household, spatial organisation of the house and of the work site, telecommunications usage for work, types of equipment used for work, the effects of regulatory restrictions on home-based work, the role of the home and community for the home-based worker. The survey sample included teleworkers who work for public institutions, crown corporations, or the private sector, independent contractors who work on contract for one company, self-employed consultants, and home-based business operators. The survey revealed distinct patterns between teleworkers and other home-based workers and the degree of justification for reforming existing bylaws regarding home occupations to make them less restrictive in residential zones. This, in turn, could encourage more innovative solutions to incorporating home-based work with community workspaces, backyard studios/offices, and community work centres offering support services and technologies for the entrepreneur.

This study examines the feasibility of utilising ex-weapons-grade plutonium as mixed oxide (MOX) fuel in Candu reactors, considering a reference case in which two tonnes per year of plutonium would be used and an alternative study case using four tonnes per year. The Bruce A nuclear generating station was chosen as the reference to the study, which examined whether significant modifications of reactor or process systems would be necessary to operate with a full MOX core. The study also identified plant modifications to accommodate fuel handling and other modifications necessary to accommodate enhanced security and safeguards requirements. An important part of the study defined the optimum design parameters of MOX fuel to achieve the target disposition rates without altering the design base of operating and safety measures of the reactor system and without requiring excessive fuel supply. The reference MOX fuel design employed the standard 37-element Candu geometry bundle. An alternative design considered was the 43-element CANFLEX fuel bundle, currently being qualified for commercial use.

Population health promotion : an integrated model of population health and health promotion

By Nancy Hamilton and Tariq Bhatti. Ottawa : Health Promotion Development Division, 1996. 1, 17 p. : ill., Bibl.

MICROLOG 96-04245 (1 fiche)

This paper combines the concepts of public health, community health, and population health to provide an integrated population health promotion model. It presents the model and illustrates how the model can be used to implement a population health promotion approach. The paper begins with background on programs aimed at improving health by addressing factors other than health care, and on determinants of health. It then describes the development of the population health promotion model in which three questions are considered: on what should action be taken, how action should be taken, and with whom. Values and assumptions underlying the model are explained. The examples show how the model can be used to identify possibilities for influencing determinants of health, to intervene in the area of nutritional health, and to address health concerns of particular at-risk groups.

This study provides cost comparisons for some typical closed-system aquaculture operations, quantifying the benefits of increasing production via heating of the water used for rearing. Two types of operations commercially significant in Canada were selected for study: hatchery propagation of Atlantic salmon smolts and land-based culture of rainbow trout. Models correlating the growth rates of salmon and trout with water temperature and weight of fish were used to predict the time required for the fish to reach specified weights under different elevated temperature regimes. These time periods were, in turn, compared with the time required when no water heating was provided in order to estimate the potential increase in productivity. Estimations of the margins between selling price and production cost, feed conversion rates, and feed costs were then applied to calculate the net benefit of heating to the specified temperatures. Conceptual designs of heating systems with the capability to meet the desired loads were also formulated, including various configurations of conventional boiler, solar energy, and heat reclaim technologies. Energy performance of these systems was modelled by computer simulation, annual costs for each of the cases were determined, and life-cycle costs of heating were compared with the theoretical benefits. Using this approach, it was possible to determine economic viability and to identify the most cost-effective heating system designs.

Ce document sur la gestion des matières résiduelles est proposé par le ministère de l'Environnement et de la Faune du Québec. Il s'inscrit dans la démarche de consultation publique sur cette question que le gouvernement compte tenir dans les prochaines semaines. Il brosse, de façon succincte, un portrait de la situation des résidus. Y sont décrits, en première partie, les différentes réalisations dans le domaine de l'élimination et de la mise en valeur ainsi que les enjeux sociaux qu'il est possible de tirer des consultations tenues récemment par le Bureau d'audiences publiques sur l'environnement. En deuxième partie, le document propose des principes et des objectifs sur lesquels s'appuieront les actions à venir dans le domaine de la gestion des résidus. Le troisième chapitre avance des propositions de gestion élaborées par le ministère de l'Environnement et de la Faune.

A Preliminary evaluation of selected polymeric composites as behind-armour debris mitigators

By M. Szymczak. Valcartier, PQ : Dept. of National Defence, Research & Development Branch, Defence Research Establishment Valcartier, 1995. v. 29 p. : ill., Bibl. (DREV memorandum / Defence Research Establishment Valcartier ; TM-9501) MICROLOG 96-04115 (1 fiche)

Describes a study undertaken to evaluate the performance of selected polymeric composites as spall liners new armoured vehicles. The main role of these liners is to mitigate the generation of behind-armour debris. The investigators used a velocity merit rating to rate the composites for a given areal density of 15 kilograms per square metre based on the impact velocity for which there is a 50% chance of perforation of the armour. The materials were also tested in a contact spall liner configuration with quarter-inch steel base armour and a half-inch M2 projectile fired at full charge as the threat. Behind-armour debris measurements were made with flash radiography and witness packs. The evaluation results allow demonstration of the performance of composites (glass, aramid, and polyethylene fibre) and of plates that have been designed for ballistic applications. CA ND PS SC

Preliminary investigation into the use of traffic control algorithms within the DREnet

By Joe Spagnolo. Ottawa : Dept. of National Defence, NDHQ, DRDCS-2, 1994. 1, 37 p. : ill., Bibl. MICROLOG 96-04114 (1 fiche)

Presents the findings of a preliminary technical investigation into the use of communications traffic control algorithms within the Defence Research Establishment Network (DREnet). The DREnet Infrastructure must be enhanced to allow such real-time applications as video conferencing and distributed simulation to effectively share common communication links with each other as well as with non-real-time applications. The report highlights two approaches for controlling traffic on shared communication links. The first, known as Fair-Share, attempts to provide guaranteed bandwidth utilisation to flows with explicit bandwidth requirements while sharing the remaining bandwidth among all flows using a common link. The second approach is known as class-based queuing, which also provides a mechanism for different classes of traffic using a communication link to consume their allotted bandwidth and allows any unused bandwidth to be shared among competing classes. Unlike Fair-Share, the latter approach prioritises classes to attain acceptable response times required by real-time traffic flows. Various tests conducted as part of this investigation are described and results are presented. CA ND PS SC TE

Presents the findings of part of an ongoing study to assess the productivity of chinook salmon in the Cowichan River, in which researchers began monitoring the downstream migration of chinook juveniles in 1991. They also monitored the interaction between hatchery and naturally-spawned chinook juveniles. Various techniques and equipment such as minnow traps and purse seines were used on the river in 1991 and 1992 to collect information on growth, abundance, and migration timing of juvenile chinook salmon. Presents results of a study investigating the feasibility of using radio tags to determine the migration routes, patterns of movement, and migration speed of chinook salmon smolts in the lower Fraser River. A specific part of the investigation assessed fish use of two constructed embayments in the river, one on Annacis Channel and another at Richmond Island. The researchers tagged the smolts with Advanced Telemetry Systems Model 392 transmitters (5-milliwatt) and tracked the fish in boats, with positions taken using a global positioning system receiver. Results presented include routes of fish released at Mission, below New Westminster, and between Ruskin and Port Main. Tidal and river current effects on smolt migration are also discussed. The primary objective of this pilot project was to evaluate the feasibility of combining the following three data sources: the 1986 Census of Population, the 1986-1987 Health and Activity Limitation Survey, and the Manitoba health longitudinal file on health care service utilization. In the current economic context, all partners in health care delivery systems, be they public or private, are obliged to identify the factors that influence the utilization of health care services. To improve our understanding of the phenomena that underlie these relationships, Statistics Canada and the Manitoba Centre for Health Policy and Evaluation have just set up a new database. For a representative sample of the population of the province of Manitoba, cross-sectional microdata on individuals' health and socio-economic characteristics were linked with detailed longitudinal data on utilization of health care services. L'objectif premier de ce projet pilote est d'évaluer la faisabilité de réunir les trois sources de données suivantes : le recensement de la population de 1986, l'enquête sur la santé et les limitations d'activités de 1986-1987, et le fichier longitudinal sur les soins de santé de la Manitoba Health. Le contexte économique actuel oblige tous les partenaires des réseaux de soins de santé, qu'ils soient publics ou privés, à identifier les facteurs qui conditionnent l'utilisation des services de soins de santé. Pour améliorer notre compréhension des phénomènes qui sous-tendent ces relations, Statistique Canada et le Manitoba Centre for Health Policy and Evaluation viennent de mettre sur pied une nouvelle base de données. Pour un échantillon représentatif de la province du Manitoba, des microdonnées transversales portant sur le niveau de santé des individus, sur leurs caractéristiques socio-économiques et des données longitudinales détaillées portant sur l'utilisation des services de soins de santé ont été coupées. Describes a process that uses field observations to develop quantitative data on the distributions of species. Three examples are provided, using taxa that are of interest from a biodiversity conservation or wood production perspective in Ontario: jack pine (Pinus banksiana Lamb.), the five-lined skink (Eumeces fasciatus), and the American black duck (Anas rubripes). The process aims to spatially extend biological site data by correlating the distribution of species with prevailing environmental conditions. These functions are then coupled to computer-based data, enabling those landscapes that are most suitable for the species to be identified. Three steps are described: spatial database development, compilation of site data, and making spatial predictions using either the BIOCLIM/BIOMAP suite of computer software or statistical models. Example results presented include maps showing climatic domains or probability of occurrence of the three species in Ontario.

Background information came from terrain evaluation studies for pipeline and road construction purposes. The study area is located mainly within the zone of discontinuous permafrost, and most of the area is covered by morainic deposits. Surficial materials in the study area are mainly deposits of the Late Wisconsinian Laurentide Ice Sheet that buried the area under about 600 metres of ice. Information is included on these and other types of glacial, alluvial, organic, and slope deposits; on the stages of glaciation in the area; and on economic and geotechnical aspects of the surficial deposits.

Le Conseil supérieur de l'éducation a choisi, au cours de l'année 1994-95, de s'interroger sur la maîtrise du changement en éducation. Il traite ici de la maîtrise du changement en six chapitres. D'abord, il rappelle l'expérience du système d'éducation québécois en matière de changement et en dégage quelques leçons. Puis, il aborde la problématique du changement dans ses concepts majeurs et sous quatre aspects interreliés : en rapport avec la vie des établissements; en lien avec la profession enseignante; du point de vue de l'État et de ses partenaires; enfin, en relation avec la recherche en éducation.

Au Canada, l'entrée en vigueur, en 1978, de la Loi canadienne sur les droits de la personne a rendu illégale la pratique de la disparité salariale entre les hommes et les femmes. En effet, la Loi encourage et préconise le droit de tous à l'égalité des chances d'épanouissement. Sur le plan financier, cela signifie que les employés des deux sexes doivent recevoir des traitements égaux, comme le prévoit l'article 11 de la Loi, qui exige "l'égalité de rémunération pour des fonctions équivalentes". La parité salariale fait maintenant partie des lignes directrices officielles de dix des treize compétences canadiennes, même si certaines dispositions varient selon la province ou le territoire. Ce recueil comprend les principaux cas de disparité salariale dont a été saisie la Commission canadienne des droits de la personne. On y trouve entre autres des exemples de rajustement de la rémunération, de rejet de plaintes alléguant des pratiques salariales discriminatoires et, s'il y a lieu, la portée de chaque cas est indiquée.

In approaching this study, the committee had one major goal: to determine if Canada is meeting the challenge. Are we fully recognizing the particular risks women refugees face? Are we addressing their special needs? Have our training programs changed to reflect this priority? Are we acting in accordance with our new awareness or are older attitudes undermining real change? Are we doing all we can to identify and remove the systemic barriers we know women face in gaining access to Canada's protection?

Regional funding formula : a resource allocation initiative to support the regionalization of health care services

Victoria : Ministry of Health & Ministry Responsible for Seniors, Regional Programs, Regional Funding & Support, 1996. 135 p. : ill., Bibl.
MICROLOG 96-04027 (2 fiche)

The purpose of this paper is to formulate a funding model that will allow the British Columbia Ministry of Health and Ministry Responsible for Seniors to make an equitable distribution of operating funds to the province's regional health boards. The issue considered is how to fairly allocate a fixed budget that is determined externally through the political process and government priorities. The model does not respond to issues concerning the adequacy of specific regional funding allocations to meet local health needs nor does it prescribe any compensation for past imbalances. The paper discusses key issues relating to resource allocation, based on a comprehensive review of academic research and work done in other jurisdictions, and presents a funding methodology. This methodology was developed based on a consultative and participatory approach involving health professionals, key stakeholders, regional forums, working groups, and health boards. The appendices include population data, health service utilisation data, and a report on the data and methodology used in creating a composite index reflecting different components of regional cost variations.

The main purpose of Alberta Education's regulatory reform is to ensure alignment of school board plans with government directions for education through modification or elimination of regulations, policies, and other departmental operating procedures and practices that have become cumbersome and outdated and that hinder school boards in carrying out their tasks responding to the educational needs of students. The objective of the reform is to reduce costs and to accelerate and improve decision-making in education. This document lists the guiding principles of Alberta Education's regulatory reform, a list of deregulation actions since 1989, and a regulation review schedule. The appendix includes a table that describes all of the components of Alberta Education's legislation framework that provides important information across many organisational levels.

Through its regulatory reform plan, Alberta Health will provide a simpler, more flexible and cost-effective regulatory system. The plan has the following goals: to eliminate or amend regulations which prevent the restructuring of health services and programs at the level of service delivery; to retain and improve regulations required for protection of public health and safety or the administration of health services and programs; to minimise inter-jurisdictional regulatory overlap, or to harmonise such overlap where it is unavoidable; to use standards and guidelines instead of regulations when possible; to consolidate, simplify, and streamline regulations; and to transfer inappropriate regulations to the most appropriate ministry. This document outlines recent regulatory reform initiatives, legislative activities to integrate health programs and the delivery of health services, and summarises the regulatory reform plan. Lists are included of regulations scheduled to be reviewed. The appendix contains a table of regulations, their review dates, and proposed actions to be taken with regard to each regulation.

Elle est destinée à faciliter la détection des régions urbaines à haut risque et toute tendance générale dans la répartition de la maladie. Des hypothèses concernant les facteurs de causalité sous-jacents peuvent ainsi être formulées et vérifiées, et des mesures de lutte visant à réduire la morbidité et la mortalité pourront éventuellement être élaborées. La distribution géographique de la mortalité chez les aînés dans les régions métropolitaines de recensement et dans les agglomérations de recensement au Canada a été illustrée à l'aide d'une série de 35 cartes préparées à partir d'analyses statistiques de la mortalité au cours de la période de 1986 à 1991.

Report on the law of coroners

New challenges to the investigative and public inquiry roles of coroners, expansion of the concept of standing at coroners' inquests, increasing concern over public accountability, Charter of Rights and Freedoms issues, and developments in forensic medicine and epidemiology have occurred since the last examination of the Ontario coroner system in 1971. Accordingly, this report considers how Ontario investigates deaths and how well the current coroner system serves the public. It begins with a brief history of the Ontario coroner system from its beginnings in English medieval law, and examines the current law and operation of the coroner system in the province. This comprises a discussion of such topics as the statutory duties to notify the coroner in the event of certain types of deaths, the investigation that the coroner conducts, and the ordering and conduct of inquests, as well as certain jurisdictional issues. The report then describes generally the coroner and medical examiner systems in existence in Canada, noting differences among jurisdictions, and considers certain proposals for reform as well as current models in Alberta, Quebec, and British Columbia. Finally, the report makes recommendations for reform, addressing such matters as qualifications for coroners, circumstances in which deaths should be investigated, procedures for conducting inquests, and measures to be taken with the result of an inquest.

This document reports achievements to date in the Alberta Ministry of Energy's regulatory review, a three-phase process initiated in 1993 as part of the provincial initiative to ease the regulatory burden on Alberta business. The Ministry's goal was to increase efficiency for both business and government by streamlining, simplifying, and (where reasonable) removing regulatory requirements. These phases include an initial review of all Ministry regulatory requirements, a stakeholder consultation, and a final review including implementation of an action plan. The document includes a table listing regulations scheduled for review, whether the regulation will be allowed to lapse (and if so, the sunset date), and actions to be taken (under way or proposed); and tables listing the purposes of regulations or acts administered by the Ministry.

The Nova Scotia Research Foundation Corporation Geophysics Group carried out gravity surveys in Nova Scotia over a 36-year interval, mostly in the province's Carboniferous basins. The resulting gravity data is an essential component for current and future resource development and geoscience projects in Nova Scotia. This report describes the Group's gravity survey work carried out from February 1994 to March 1995 and includes descriptions of the instrumentation used, survey methods, survey documentation, and survey data processing. The need for reprocessing of older survey data is also discussed, along with the procedures used for reprocessing these data to modern standards. The report concludes with a discussion of the accuracy of the gravity data and information on the gravity data formats used. Appendices include a gravity survey listing indicating the release status of the data; a gravity survey parameter listing; and tables giving details on the gravity surveys since 1952.

Forest management and harvesting strategies in the northern Ontario boreal mixedwood zone have traditionally focused on clear-cutting or selective harvesting followed by attempted conversion to conifers. Changing public expectations about forest management and demands for protection of non-timber values in the boreal zone have led to a need for integrated management of the boreal forest. This in turn has created the need to develop ecologically and operationally sound alternatives for managing those forests. Such a need is being addressed through the Black Sturgeon research project reviewed in this paper. The project focuses on long-term, stand-level ecosystem response to disturbance and silvicultural manipulation, and evaluates feasibility and impacts of adopting alternative forest management approaches that avoid clear-cutting. The emphasis is on understanding ecological processes and interrelationships. The research reviewed includes a fire ecology component, a site preparation component, and a harvesting component.

À la section 2, on trouve un résumé du cadre institutionnel et des principaux défis que doivent relever les canadiens pour établir des partenariats entre les secteurs public et privé aux fins de l'approvisionnement en eau et du traitement des eaux usées. La section 3 porte plus particulièrement sur les expériences de partenariat entre le secteur public et le secteur privé en France, aux États-Unis et au Royaume-Uni et elle fait état de certaines faiblesses et points forts généraux propres à leurs systèmes. Des marchés internationaux choisis dans les domaines de la technologie des eaux et des eaux usées et des services sont mis en relief dans les sections 4 et 5. La section 6 contient des conclusions et la section 7, des recommandations.

En 1983, la pratique du jardinage a commencé dans les forêts feuillues inépuissantes du Québec, d'abord sur de petites superficies, pour prendre de l'ampleur au cours des années subséquentes. Le but de ces premiers dispositifs établis à Sainte-Véronique en 1983 était de comparer l'accroissement des arbres et le développement de la végétation par rapport aux diverses intensités de la coupe. À cette expérience, nous avons ajouté aussi une bande coupée à blanc pour fins de comparaison. Nous avons déjà présenté les premiers résultats provenant de ce même dispositif expérimental cinq ans après la coupe; dans ce premier ouvrage, nous avons souligné que la période de cinq ans est relativement courte pour évaluer les effets du traitement, mais qu'elle fournirait de bons indices pour les années à venir. Ce mémoire est basé sur 10 ans de croissance et devrait donner les meilleurs indices sur le développement des peuplements en fonction des traitements appliqués.

Reports results of a Dover sole biomass survey conducted off Vancouver Island in February 1995 using a chartered trawler. The survey timing coincided with the period of peak landings for the area's Dover sole fishery and overlapped with dates of a similar survey conducted in 1981. Results presented include summaries of catch-rate data, comparisons of data with those of the 1981 survey, biomass estimates derived using both the 1981 and 1995 survey data, and estimated length-weight, length-maturity, and age-length relationships for the Vancouver Island stock. Those relationships are compared with those derived for a more northerly stock.

Rethinking the fundamentals : provincial-local finances in the Greater Toronto Area

Greater Toronto (Ont.). Coordinating Committee. Toronto : The Committee, 1995. 8 p. : ill.
MICROLOG 96-04404 (1 fiche)

This study consists of three basic components that examine financing issues in the Greater Toronto Area (GTA). The first component, an inflow-outflow analysis, examines whether the GTA supplies the province with more or less total revenue than it receives back in the form of total expenditures. The second component, a subsidy allocation analysis, seeks to compare levels of provincial subsidy for municipal and educational programs in the GTA with those in the rest of the province. The third component, a tax burden analysis, addresses the issue of comparative residential and non-residential property tax and user fee burdens in the GTA and the rest of the province. Analytical methodology and results are presented along with recommendations regarding the GTA-provincial financial relationship.

Retiree migrants to a small Ontario community

By Roy T. Bowles, Kenneth B. Beesley and Cynthia Johnston. Ottawa : Canada Mortgage & Housing Corporation, 1994. x, 77 p. : Maps, Bibl.
MICROLOG 96-04095 (2 fiche)

Presents results of a social survey based on interviews with 172 residents in Bobcaygeon, Ontario who were 55 years of age or older, retired, and who were migrants to the community. A major objective was to document the ways in which the retirees who migrate from urban areas to small non-metropolitan communities such as Bobcaygeon relate to those communities. Questions examined include the extent to which they shop and obtain other services locally, degree of travel to regional centres for their needs, participation in community activities, attitudes toward the local community, and degree of satisfaction with the community and the levels of service and opportunities provided in the community. The social and planning policy implications of the findings are discussed. The appendix includes a copy of the interview questionnaire.

The Alberta mental health system is fragmented, difficult to access, unbalanced, inefficient, and provides low customer satisfaction. This document sets out a new direction for Alberta mental health services that will result in a reformed, community-based and consumer-focused system. It explains the role of the Provincial Mental Health Board in consolidating services, planning a reformed system, implementing new strategies, and divest or transfer responsibility to regional health authorities. Highlights of Board activities to date are reviewed and the roles of other health service organisations in the new system are also outlined. The document then reviews the impacts of the reforms on health systems staff, the financial implications, and how results of the reforms will be evaluated.

On y examine les motifs qui ont amené Environnement Canada à participer à la promotion des techniques environnementales canadiennes sur les marchés naissants, et on y donne un aperçu du Programme canadien de formation en environnement, mis sur pied par Environnement Canada, de concert avec divers partenaires, pour répondre aux besoins des nouveaux marchés des techniques de l'environnement. Ce survol traite notamment des objectifs stratégiques du PCFE, du Programme de formation aux techniques de l'eau potable et des eaux usées et du rôle du Centre technique des eaux usées d'Environnement Canada. On décrit la situation qui existait au Mexique au début du PCFE ainsi que le cadre bilatéral qui a permis d'y lancer ce programme, et on fait un compte rendu détaillé de l'expérience mexicaine du PCFE. En conclusion, on évalue cette expérience et on recommande des orientations futures du PCFE, y compris l'élargissement éventuel de ce programme à d'autres marchés naissants dans le domaine de l'environnement.

The report examines the rationale for Environment Canada's decision to become involved in the promotion of Canadian environmental capabilities in emerging economy markets, a detailed outline of the Canadian Environmental Training Opportunities Program, created by Environment Canada with its partners to respond to the needs of emerging environmental markets, and the strategic objectives of CETOP, the Water and Wastewater Technology Training Program and, the role of Environment Canada's Wastewater Technology Centre. The situation prevailing in Mexico at the outset of CETOP, as well as the bilateral framework under which CETOP was launched in that country and a detailed account of what has taken place in Mexico under the auspices of CETOP are also examined. The report concludes with an assessment of the Mexican experiment and suggests future directions for CETOP, including possible expansion to other emerging environmental markets.

The recent increase in socio-economic problems is forcing teachers to spend less time teaching and more time addressing such issues as hunger, depression, and substance abuse among students. This manual is designed to address these problems by helping teachers, administrators, families, and community agencies work together to provide an efficient, effective, and co-ordinated program that encourages healthy behaviour and lifestyle choices for students. The SAFE (Student Assistance For Everyone) program encourages schools to keep their approach simple and direct, using an incremental approach to intervention that stresses starting with the least intrusive, least time-consuming, and least costly steps. Sections of the manual cover such topics as the influences on students in the 1990s, the SAFE program model, assessing needs, identifying resources, recruiting SAFE program workers and team building, risk prevention strategies, identifying at-risk students, the intervention process, supporting students, protecting students from experiencing the consequences of their own behaviour, enlisting parental and community support, staff training, promoting the program, and program evaluation.

Science, agriculture and food security

By Joseph H. Hulse. Ottawa : NRC Research Press, 1995. xiv, 242 p. : Bibl.
ISBN 0-660-16210-5
MICROLOG 96-04414 (3 fiche) (Available on fiche only)

This book examines the differing concepts of food security and the practicalities, policies, and resources that shape issues of food security. It begins with discussion of the nature of food security, its components, and related concepts such as self-sufficiency and global carrying capacity. It then reviews food consumption patterns in developed nations and developing regions, and discusses the complexities of determining what constitutes an adequate diet, taking into account recommended dietary allowances, variability in food composition, dietary balance and imbalance, diet and disease, nutrient deficiencies, intolerances, and food allergies. The book also reviews divergent concepts of sustainable agriculture, examining resources and policies that influence economically efficient and ecologically conservative food production and distribution. Soil and water management, genetic diversity, atmosphere and climate, energy in agriculture, government policies, and production systems are discussed as they relate to food security. Finally, the book reviews agricultural research, notably that conducted by members of the Consultative Group on International Agricultural Research, research on agricultural pests and diseases, the need to improve post-production systems (including markets and transportation), food science research, and future requirements for human resources to ensure food security.

Sea surface modelling and simulation

By Anastasios Drosopoulos. Ottawa : National Defence, Defence Research Establishment Ottawa, 1995. xii, 28 p. : ill., Bibl. (Report / Defence Research Establishment Ottawa ; no. 1282) MICROLOG 96-04302 (1 fiche)

Describes the modelling and generation of realistic sea surfaces using directional wave number spectra. Explains the model details and presents results of a preliminary investigation into non-linear, non-Gaussian aspects of the model. A comparison with field data illuminates the difference between theory and practice. The surfaces generated by the model can be used as input in current radar scattering models to accurately predict sea clutter behaviour. CA ND PS SC

Seasonal changes in the body organs of cultured sea scallop, Placopecten magellanicus, and coincidence of spawning with water temperature, seston, and phytoplankton community dynamics

By Randy W. Penney and Cynthia H. McKenzie. St. John's : Dept. of Fisheries & Oceans ; Memorial University of Newfoundland, Ocean Sciences Centre, 1996. iv, 26 p. : ill., Bibl. (Canadian technical report of fisheries and aquatic sciences / Canada. Dept. of Fisheries & Oceans ; no. 2104 ISSN 0706-6457) CCG-P no. FS 97-6/2104E MICROLOG 96-04319 (1 fiche)

The purpose of this report is to describe seasonal changes observed in the body organ weights of cultured sea scallops which may impact upon the marketability of cultured scallop products. The report considers coincident physical and biological environmental dynamics which may act as spawning triggers and, indirectly, of body organ weight variations related to the spawning cycle. The scallops studied originated from stock collected in spat collectors in western Newfoundland and transferred as year-old spat to a commercial mussel and scallop farm for subsequent growing. Investigators took and pooled scallops from two separate year classes to obtain scallops of a wide size range (30-118 millimetres shell height) over the entire sampling period. Separate regression equations were developed for two size classes (under and over 70 millimetre shell height) since body organ weights of smaller scallops were affected differently by seasonal changes compared to larger scallops. In February 1996, the Nova Scotia Minister of Finance released a White Paper which asked Nova Scotians about the future direction of provincial finances and proposed a commitment to sound financial management, expressed in a framework for legislation and policy for guiding long-term public finances. This document describes the consultation process that was conducted to facilitate debate and generate public response concerning the White Paper. It then summarises the responses to a government survey concerning various issues raised in the paper, as well as individual responses to the paper from organisations including the Metropolitan Halifax Chamber of Commerce, business-related associations, and labour unions. Corporate Research Associates conducted a telephone survey including a series of questions that closely matched questions posed in the White Paper; results of this survey are also summarised and compared to those of the government survey.

MICROLOG 96-04285 (1 fiche)

Presents a surveillance radar model to support the ongoing Multi-Sensor Data Fusion performance evaluation study for potential application to the Canadian Patrol Frigate mid-life upgrade. This model takes into account the sensor's design parameters and external environmental effects such as clutter, propagation, and jamming. To a large extent, the model is based on the available literature and on relevant experience and recent studies in the field. In addition, the latest findings regarding the dominant perturbing effects affecting the radar detection performance are included. The radar model can be used to generate target contacts and false alarms in scenarios for multi-sensor data fusion studies while the scenario is running. The radar simulation using the model provides a realistic simulation of a radar behaviour in typical naval operational environments. The scenarios of interest consist of point-target (missiles) attacks on the open sea.

Situational analysis of the overnight and excursion cruise industry on the Great Lakes, St. Lawrence River and interconnecting waterways, executive summary, vol. 1 : overnight cruise ships

Toronto : Economic Planning Group ; Daniel Arbour et associés, 1991. 38 p. Contracted by Tourism Canada.
MICROLOG 96-04387 (1 fiche)

Summarises findings and recommendations of a study of potential opportunities for the overnight cruise ship sector on the Great Lakes, St. Lawrence River, and interconnecting waterways. Begins with a survey of the existing North American cruise industry in general and the Great Lakes/St. Lawrence cruise industry in particular, then discusses constraints on the further development of that industry due to the regulatory and legislative environment. The economics of overnight cruise ships on the Great Lakes, St. Lawrence, and interconnecting waterways are analysed for four scenarios. The impact on cruise ship economics of changing the regulatory/legislative environment is also assessed. Also evaluates ports and itineraries for overnight cruise ships and develops several new itineraries for both extended cruises and pocket cruises on the Great Lakes and St. Lawrence. Concludes with an estimate of the economic benefits accruing from St. Lawrence River/east coast cruises and a strategy and action plan for further development and expansion of the cruise ship industry in the study area.

The Southeast Industrial Area in Calgary covers about 5,200 hectares and contains the only significant supply of rail-served industrial land in the city. This Area Structure Plan is intended to define a land use concept for the Area and to provide for a range of industrial uses. It is aimed at identifying appropriate locations for various types of industrial uses in the Area in a manner that minimises any adverse impact on adjacent residential communities. The Plan also sets out transportation and utility infrastructure systems necessary for the orderly development of the Area. Suitable provisions are made for active/passive recreational activities within the study area in co-ordination with adjacent residential communities and Calgary's regional open space system. Environmental considerations are noted, notably those relating to potential soil and groundwater contamination. This Plan document is in two parts: the Plan itself, to be adopted by bylaw, and supporting information to the plan recommendations. The latter includes descriptions of existing conditions in the Area and of development constraint areas, as well as a review of the Plan's policy context.

Spatial forest modelling and landscape management

By Glen Jordan, Emlin Z. Baskent and Gary A. Whittaker. Fredericton : Canadian Forest Service, Maritimes Region, 1995. 13 p. : ill. Paper presented at GIS'95.
MICROLOG 96-04076 (1 fiche)

This paper offers a solution for a landscape-based approach to forest management design, founded on spatial forest modelling techniques. It describes a new version of the Arc/info-based GISFORMAN forest simulator called GISFORMAN II, which incorporates an extended array of geographically referenced harvesting strategies and forest performance indicators. The former provide the means to vary harvest openings in management strategy development, while the latter provide the means to assess their forest-wide effects on landscape pattern dynamics. The paper demonstrates the application of GISFORMAN II using two simple test forests of 100,000 hectares each, with identical age class structures and stand types but different spatial structures. The study demonstrates the differences in spatial forest dynamics and resulting landscape patterns arising from different initial spatial structures and variations in harvest opening constraints. The paper also speculates about the consequences for timber and non-timber values and reaches conclusions about the role of spatial forest modelling in forest management.

Reconnaissons-nous vraiment les risques particuliers que courent les femmes réfugiées? Répondons-nous à leurs besoins spéciaux? Nos programmes de formation se sont-ils adaptés à cette priorité? Nos actions reflètent-elles notre nouvelle prise de conscience ou les vieilles attitudes empêchent-elles de véritables changements? Faisons-nous le maximum pour détecter et supprimer les obstacles systémiques auxquels les femmes se heurtent, comme nous le savons, pour obtenir la protection du Canada?

The specific goals of this study were to identify and assess existing opportunities for strengthening the development and competitive positioning of Ontario's specialty outdoors tourism products, and to prepare an appropriate information base and implementation framework to support the planning, development, marketing, and management of the specialty outdoors tourism sector in the province. The study begins with a characterisation of the nature of specialty outdoors tourism and its industry organisation, market trends and segmentation (including US and international markets), tourist profiles, identification of market opportunities, and a summary of strengths and weaknesses of the Ontario specialty outdoors sector. It then lists key factors involved in the success of adventure tourism/ecotourism destinations and provides strategic directions for Ontario's specialty outdoors sector. Sectoral needs and opportunities are listed and discussed, and specific recommendations are made regarding tourism product initiatives such as trail systems, protected areas, culture/adventure tourism, and specialty guidebook production. The study ends with recommended marketing initiatives and implementation guidelines.

The main objectives of this study are to identify opportunities for enhancing and promoting Ontario cultural tourism, and to prepare an information base and implementation framework to guide future actions related to product enhancement, marketing, research, organisation, and policy development. The study methodology included a literature review, a market profile of Ontario cultural tourism products based on existing data, and analysis of the strengths and weaknesses of those products. The study report begins by defining cultural tourism, the typology of cultural tourism products, and the criteria for marketability of these products in the national and international context. It then presents the findings of a situation analysis of Ontario's cultural tourism products and profiles the cultural tourism markets in the province, including profiles of cultural tourists, historic trends impacting the market, motivations for cultural tourism, market size, and barriers to participation. Finally, it presents recommended strategies and key regional opportunities for enhancing cultural tourism in Ontario and outlines a framework for implementation of those strategies.

The Hurwitz Group is a Paleoproterozoic sequence of continental to shallow marine rocks preserved as a series of outliers in the Hearne Province, southern District of Keewatin. The outliers represent the remnants of an intracratonic basin that formed between about 2.45 and 2.11 billion years ago. Recent research has raised problems regarding the relationship between the Hurwitz Group and the Montgomery Lake Group (lying unconformably below the Hurwitz Group in the Montgomery Lake area) and, as a consequence, raised questions about stratigraphic relationships in the lower part of the Hurwitz Group. This report notes the importance of addressing these stratigraphic questions, states the problems to be resolved, and proposes solutions. Of special interest is the question whether type-area Montgomery Lake Group rocks should be separated from those mapped as Montgomery Lake sedimentary rocks or as Montgomery Lake Group rocks in the Padiel belt (45 kilometres north-east of Montgomery Lake).

Investigators conducted a series of fracture toughness tests on side-grooved high-strength low-alloy (HSLA) steel specimens using a range of test temperatures and loading rates. This report describes the stretch zones found on the fracture surfaces of these specimens, identifies the critical crack tip opening displacement and J values which were determined from stretch zone measurements, and identifies trends in toughness data with respect to test temperature and loading rate. Stretch zone width was measured using stereoscopic imaging with a scanning electron microscope. The data are examined to determine the relationship between stretch zone width and temperature at constant loading rate, and the relationship between stretch zone width and loading rate at constant temperature.

The report also includes laboratory protocols which have been adapted during the investigation. The researchers conducted a survey using 20 restriction endonuclease enzymes on 60 frozen samples of Arctic char from Lake Hazen, Craig Lake, and central Ellesmere Island in the Northwest Territories to determine the existence of polymorphisms in mtDNA and to assess whether RFLPs could be used to distinguish stocks in local geographical areas. A subset of five endonuclease enzymes was used to examine fresh samples of hatchery lineages of Arctic char originally from Storvæn in northern Norway, from Labrador, and from two locations in the Northwest Territories. This was done to increase the geographic area examined in the search for genetic variability.

Le travail à domicile reçoit une attention considérable dans la presse populaire, et cette tendance s'accroît selon la plupart des observateurs. Dans cet ouvrage, on examine trois questions concernant les répercussions sociales et environnementales du travail à domicile : comment le travail à domicile change-t-il les modes d'activités, les réseaux sociaux et les espaces vivables qu'utilisent les gens ; quel est le rôle du domicile et du quartier dans ce contexte ; et, quelles mesures peut-on prendre pour mettre au point des formes appropriées de domiciles et de collectivités, qui renforcent les aspects positifs des activités de travail à domicile ?

Three-year business plan, 1996-97 to 1998-99

Alberta. Alberta Health. Edmonton : The Ministry, 1996. 10 p.
MICROLOG 96-04202 (1 fiche)

This Alberta Health business plan identifies goals, strategies, targets, and performance measures through the next 3 years to streamline and integrate the province's health system. In general, the health system will operate on a regional basis to provide treatment services and emphasize healthy behaviors to prevent, delay, and reduce the effects of illness. The plan also describes the environmental context, financial plan, anticipated characteristics of the health system, and proposed performance measures. This document outlines plan strategies and measures under four goals: maintaining a continuum of affordable, accessible, and appropriate high-quality health services; increasing the ability of Albertans to lead healthy and independent lives; increasing financial contributions based on ability to pay; and increasing the ability of health system partners to demonstrate accountability for the use of health resources and outcomes achieved.

Community Health Boards (CHBs) are an essential part of the renewed health care system in Nova Scotia. This guide introduces the subject of CHBs to those involved in health planning in the province. It first explains why the Nova Scotia health care system needs renewing and describes the new planning and management structures being implemented to allow greater efficiency and accountability in the planning, co-ordination, and management of the health care system. The guide then reviews the role of the CHB, including the responsibility for establishing local priorities for primary care services. To aid in understanding this role, the guide provides definitions of primary care services, primary health care, and other levels of care. Includes addresses and phone numbers of the provincial Dept. of Health and of the four Regional Health Boards.

On September 21, 1995, the Supreme Court of Canada struck down key sections of the Tobacco Products Control Act. The Act was proclaimed in 1989 to protect Canadians, particularly young Canadians, from inducements to use tobacco products. The government is now facing the challenge of re-thinking and re-designing the way it has attempted to prevent and reduce tobacco consumption among Canadians. This document outlines the general legislative directions that the federal gov-

This decision was based first on the recognition by committee members of the overall poor health status of Aboriginal peoples, and second, on a request by the Métis Council of Canada for attention to this issue. The committee's intent in pursuing this work was to hear from all groups of Aboriginal peoples (Indian, Inuit and Métis) about the issues as they perceived them. The members wanted to focus on the assessment by Aboriginal peoples of the problems and their view of way to resolve them. This document presents the committee's report on the following topics: the Aboriginal peoples; the foundation of wellness; toward holistic wellness; particular concerns within aboriginal communities; and, general barriers to wellness.

Examines the toxicity of the chemical warfare agent sulphur mustard, bis-(2-chloroethyl)sulphide, in adult rat lung organ cultures. Investigators exposed lung tissue samples to the agent for 60 minutes and collected lung slices at specified time-points after exposure (2, 5, 8, and 21 days). They measured toxicity using the 3-(4,5-dimethylthiazol-2-yl)-2,5-diphenyltetrazolium bromide (MTT) cytotoxicity assay and histopathology analysis. Results presented include degree of lung damage versus expression times, the relationship between structural changes in lung tissue and biochemically measured toxicity, and degrees of similarity of the observed damage to the damage found in animals and man exposed to sulphur mustard in vivo. The results also indicate the usefulness of the in-vitro model for studying the toxicity and mechanism of action of sulphur mustard.

This literature review was initiated to evaluate the scientific basis for a potential international protocol on heavy metals in the environment, and to contribute information on the global significance of natural sources of metals to the environment. The author evaluates the evidence presented for significant long-range global atmospheric transport of metals released by anthropogenic processes. The chief lines of evidence are global estimates of natural and anthropogenic metal emissions to the atmosphere, source identification in receptor models, the distribution of metals in remote and rural ecosystems, and regional-scale mass balance studies. The author discusses this evidence in terms of the validity of the underlying assumptions, and the challenges involved in distinguishing between metals of natural and anthropogenic origin at receptor sites. Research directions are suggested to help in resolving the uncertainties that remain.

Transient overnight boating, or boating activity consisting of trips of one or more nights away from the home port in boats which have sleeping accommodation and on-board meal and toilet facilities, is a relatively small but important tourism-oriented market segment of the overall recreational boating marketplace. This report reviews the current transient overnight boating market in the region of the Great Lakes and the waterways which connect them. It includes an inventory of boats 25 feet and over; market analysis data such as the number of transient overnight boat trips taken in Ontario, boating market segments, boater profiles, boater ratings of various boating areas, market trends, boater tourism expenditure patterns, and economic impact of transient overnight boating activity; and a four-component strategy for developing the transient overnight boating market in Ontario consisting of industry co-ordination and information dissemination, focused marketing and promotion, selective product development, and strategies dealing with the regulatory environment. The report concludes with an implementation plan. The appendix includes a boater survey questionnaire, an outline of the economic impact analysis methodology used, and market profiles of Ontario's boating regions.

Cet ouvrage porte sur le transport scolaire au Canada et se divise en trois parties : la première donne un aperçu à l'échelle du Canada, des réponses reçues et récapitule les résultats. La deuxième examine brièvement, province par province, le financement, les textes de lois principaux et les plans concernant le transport scolaire. La dernière partie décrit la situation dans les 158 commissions scolaires qui ont rempli le questionnaire. Cette partie traite surtout de l'admissibilité des élèves, des lignes de conduite de la commission scolaire, des moyens de transport utilisés, du budget et du personnel dévoué au transport. Même si on s'est efforcé de toujours présenter les données de la commissions scolaires n'ayant pas répondu à toutes les questions, dans certains cas, cela n'a pas été possible, quelques commissions scolaires n'ayant pas répondu à toutes les questions.

Summerland, BC : Okanagan Valley Tree Fruit Authority, 1995. iv, 37 p. : Ill., Bibl. ISBN 0-7726-2384-8 MICROLOG 96-04032 (1 fiche)

The Okanagan Valley Tree Fruit Authority has developed a digital atlas identifying land areas within the Okanagan, Similkameen, and Creston valleys of British Columbia that have climatic and soil characteristics suitable for tree fruit production. The atlas maps show the relative degree of suitability of different areas for growing commercial tree fruit commodities, varieties, and rootstocks. The Authority appointed a task force to carry out the mapping project, which used a computerised geographic information system to store and analyse the data for establishing suitability ratings and producing the tree fruit suitability maps. This overview describes the suitability mapping project, defines and describes the climate and soil criteria used in determining land suitability for fruit trees, and introduces the digital tree fruit suitability maps produced by the project, including their purpose, geographical range, and limitations. Instructions are included on selecting and ordering maps, ordering database map files, and ordering custom maps and analyses. Includes index.

This manual describes how tree fruit suitability ratings were derived and how suitability maps for the Project were created. Explanations of the suitability rating process include how the available data were used to create maps, limitations of the data, how suitability was determined for each climatic and soil characteristic (and each fruit commodity, variety, and rootstock), and how suitability ratings were weighted to arrive at overall suitability ratings for a given area. The use of a geographic information system in preparing the digital maps is also reviewed. Includes index.

Trials of erosion control netting for improved stability of forest roadside slopes

Describes a study conducted to test the assumption that soil netting can provide additional soil surface protection and enhance vegetation cover establishment on forest roadside slopes, and to evaluate the cost-effectiveness of the tested netting material. The study area is located in the Prince George Forest Region in British Columbia, with test plots located on a slope of about 43-45% steepness cut into an erodible glacioluvial deposit. Three types of netting were tested: Vexar polypropylene netting, Ludlow Soil Saver (made from biodegradable jute), and Eknamal 7010, a non-biodegradable, three-dimensional geomatrix netting made of heavy nylon monofilaments fused at intersections. The field study used a randomised block design with two blocks each containing five treatment levels and each level containing two lines for measurements. Results presented include percent live vegetation cover established, vegetation composition of the established live plant cover, and soil loss or gain.

Describes a study in which investigators examined the abundance and residency of juvenile chinook salmon in a pulp mill effluent mixing zone and in an upstream reference zone on the Fraser River. They used night-time snorkel surveys of the nearshore zone of the river to assess fish abundance. Residency was assessed by capturing juvenile chinook with a diver-operated submersible electrofisher and marking them with freeze brands. Additional snorkel surveys and conventional electrofishing were conducted in the effluent and reference zones during the day to document the diel movements of juvenile chinook in winter. All surveys were carried out in the winter of 1993-94, marking a total of 154 juvenile chinook. The study intended to determine whether fish used the effluent mixing zone during winter low flow conditions and to determine whether there was a preferential use of the zone by fish in winter, possibly due to the elevated temperature regime.

Since 1985, faunal remains of the Vancouver Island marmot (Marmota vancouverensis) have been discovered in four high-elevation cave sites, two in Strathcona Provincial Park and a third in Clayoquot Plateau Provincial Park. Cut marks on bones and artefacts recovered at one site indicate that the remains are the result of human hunting, and radiocarbon dating has revealed the prehistoric ages of the sites. No marmots live in the vicinity of the cave sites today, and the remains provide additional evidence for a range decline in the marmot. This report summarises the analysis of faunal remains (not only of marmot but also of other mammals) and reviews the implications for Vancouver Island marmot biogeography and conservation, as well as for Aboriginal cultural history. Recommendations are also presented for future research in British Columbia parks and for managing those cave sites.

Vision for change : a concept paper for the development of a virtual learning system — Draft

Edmonton : Alberta Advanced Education & Career Development, 1995. 31 p. : ill., Maps Executive summary (4 p.) laid in.
MICROLOG 96-04201 (1 fiche)

This discussion paper has been prepared as an initial attempt to provide a conceptual framework for facilitating and supporting system-wide change in Alberta's adult learning system. Its premise is that a province-wide virtual learning system, developed through effectively integrating technologies into programs and student support services at both traditional and non-traditional places of learning, can meet the goals of increased accessibility, cost-effectiveness, responsiveness, and accountability. The paper introduces the context for change in the province's adult learning system and outlines the features of a virtual learning system, which includes electronic networks and associated support services. It then provides examples of learning communities requiring specialised, regional, local, and home access to educational services, and outlines an implementation strategy. The appendix contains a model of a virtual learning system.

Voter registration methodologies : a benefits cost analysis

Edmonton : Elections Alberta, 1995. x, 77 p.
MICROLOG 96-04226 (2 fiche)

This analysis focuses on 23 voter registration methodologies currently or recently in use in Canada, the United States, Australia, and South Africa. The following types of processes were examined: census-type (door-to-door) enumeration; elections without lists of scenarios; permanent lists, registers, computerised databases, or continuous rolls; private-sector options; and appropriate public-sector possibilities. Two charts provide amplified details. All methodologies examined were measured in the context of their current use in Alberta, with necessary modifications made to equalise their application in an Alberta context and to preclude skewing and bias of the measurements. The benefits were measured by the application of a constructed benefits matrix, reflecting the subjective but professional assessments of Elections Alberta staff. Parameters measured by the matrix include revenue enhancement and cost sharing, administrative value, efficiencies of time, integrity, political or campaign value, availability, completeness, currency, accuracy, and multiple use. The two main financial cost indicators employed were the cost per elector and the total cost of a particular process over a decade. The results of the benefits and costs comparisons and analyses are ranked by the application of ratios. A recommendation for adopting a particular methodology concludes the analysis.

This document assesses the Holland Creek and Stocking Lake watersheds on southern Vancouver Island, beginning with an overview that provides general information on water quality in the two watersheds, as well as water quality objectives and monitoring tables. This is followed by a report presenting the details of the water quality assessment in the watersheds, forming the basis of the water quality objectives in the overview. The report includes information on watershed hydrology, water uses, and influences on water quality from land ownership, forestry, recreation, and wildlife. Water quality objectives are given for coliform bacteria, turbidity, colour, trihalomethanes and total organic carbon, pH, metals, phosphorus, and algae. The report concludes with recommendations regarding water quality monitoring.

This report assesses the water quality of Sechart Inlet on the British Columbia coast and, where appropriate, proposes objectives to protect water quality and related uses. It begins with an overview of the study area, including a physical description and summaries of biological resources found in the Inlet and of human activities in the Inlet area. It then describes the natural hydrology and oceanography of the Inlet system, particularly the circulation pattern, with respect to potential influences on water quality. It also identifies the current and anticipated human activities in the area which could significantly affect water quality, and the major sources and types of existing and potential contaminants from point and diffuse sources such as sewage, boating, forestry, and aquaculture. Water quality data are compiled and assessed, including temporal and spatial variability as well as information on bacteriological quality, nutrients, plankton, and particulates. Finally, the report proposes water quality objectives for the inlet, to be used as policy guidelines for waste, water, and fisheries management. Recommendations for monitoring water chemistry and other parameters are also included.

The Chief of Research and Development (CRAD) is the national authority for providing defence science and technology leadership to advance and maintain Canada's defence capabilities in support of the Dept. of National Defence's evolving roles and missions. This paper reviews examples of some of the situations and projects that could only be handled by CRAD, due to such reasons as national security, lack of private-sector interest, and requirements for quickly handling unique or unexpected situations. The examples are presented in three sections: the provision of direct operational support; items that could not be purchased off the shelf; and co-operative work. The examples show how defence science touches on all aspects of the operational requirements of the Canadian Forces whether it be man, machine, or man-machine interface. Wildlife diversity in British Columbia : distribution and habitat use of amphibians, reptiles, birds, and mammals in biogeoclimatic zones

The main purpose of this report is to help wildlife managers and land managers who alter habitat to determine which species are likely to occur in a geographic area and to identify critical wildlife habitats. The report aims to complement documents that describe species and ecosystems by correlating species with ecosystems. It provides general information about the relative diversity and habitat use of 560 terrestrial and marine amphibians, reptiles, birds, and mammals in British Columbia within the framework of biogeoclimatic ecosystem classification. The report is organized by geographic area; the province's 94 biogeoclimatic subzones are grouped into 49 subzone groups for wildlife. Seasonal abundance of each wildlife species is noted in the appropriate subzone group, yielding a complete species list for each subzone group by season. The 151 species, subspecies, and populations at risk plus selected species not at risk are correlated with 33 broad habitats within each biogeoclimatic zone. Some data analysis is given and graphic comparisons of wildlife use by zone and habitat use within zones are shown.

Describes supersonic wind tunnel tests in a 0.6-by-0.6-metre indraft facility to study the flight dynamic stability of a particular explosively-formed projectile configuration named Blunt Body. The tests were intended to gather experimental data on surface static pressure distribution and aerodynamic stability coefficients. Results are presented for tests made with a 6-blunt-fin explosively-formed projectile model. The model configuration was obtained from high-speed photography of various real projectiles in flight. A total of 107 runs were made at Mach numbers of 2.97, 3.50, and 3.99, for a variety of roll angles and angles of attack up to 15 degrees. Equations used for data treatment are included as well as a description of the instrumentation test setting and several model drawings. A workshop brought together a broad cross-section of representation from the various disciplines involved with ecological research and management of land and water applicable to the boreal mixed-wood forest. A combination of plenary and discussion group sessions provided feedback on three areas of interest: the significance of land clearing on preserving the ecological integrity of the Peace/Athabasca/Slave River basin aquatic resources, the state of knowledge and research on boreal forest hydrologic and aquatic resources, and what should be done in future studies on land clearing. This report provides the text of the workshop presentations by the keynote speakers and a synthesis of the workshop discussions, with recommendations. Topics of presentations include the hydrologic impacts of land clearing, impacts of

This paper identifies the factors associated with world mandates in Canada's foreign-owned subsidiary companies. It examines the processes of mandate gain and the relationship of mandates to various aspects of subsidiary performance. CA CO EX ND SS

The World Trade Organization and British Columbia's agriculture, fisheries and food industries

Victoria : Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries & Food, 1995. iii, 59 p. ISBN 0-7726-2571-9 MICROLOG 96-04317 (1 fiche)

The World Trade Organization (WTO) is one result of the new international trade agreement negotiated under the auspices of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. The new agreement establishes a new set of trade rules for the WTO to administer, contains specific commitments by 120 countries to reduce trade barriers applying to particular products, and establishes a new and expedited dispute settlement system for rule enforcement. The WTO and its rules will confront British Columbia's agriculture, fisheries, and food (AFF) sectors with significant challenges, as the new trade rules, with their commitments to reduce market access barriers, will apply to agriculture and food trade for the first time. This document outlines and explains the key terms of the new WTO trade rules as they relate to the interests and concerns of the British Columbia AFF sectors, reviews some of the impacts of the new rules on the province's AFF industries, and indicates initial program and policy initiatives that the provincial Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is undertaking to maximise opportunities and minimise challenges posed to British Columbia industries. The primary focus of the document is on the impacts on provincial and federal government programming for AFF in British Columbia.

The Government of Canada intends to adopt legislation transferring responsibility for oil and gas to the Yukon. In anticipation of that transfer, the Yukon government is developing an oil and gas regime under which it will exercise its responsibilities. This paper explains the nature and operation of the proposed regime, with the intention of encouraging discussion and soliciting comments and feedback from First Nations, the oil and gas industry, and other organisations and persons to be affected by the regime. The first section of the paper provides an overview of the regime, including why it is being developed, how it reflects First Nations interests, and the main provisions of the Canada-Yukon Oil and Gas Accord. The second section summarises and describes the contents of the proposed Yukon Oil and Gas Act, the primary instrument through which oil and gas resources will be managed. The summary follows the structure of the Act and is divided into five parts: administration, oil and gas rights, oil and gas operations, general provisions regarding audit and examination, and transition and commencement of the Act.

Other Canadian Reference Sources

- Available from Micromedia -

Canadian Index

A comprehensive index providing access to nearly 100,000 citations each year from: nine major daily newspapers, over 200 Canadian trade and business periodicals, over 50 specialized Canadian trade magazines for which indexing is unavailable elsewhere, and more than 350 general periodicals.

KIOSK: CBCA

KIOSK: CBCA is a reference tool which combines a high quality indexing and abstracting database (CBCA) with direct access to the fulltext content of the articles indexed.

CBCA Fulltext

CBCA Fulltext provides fulltext access to Canadian periodicals and current affairs information, and incorporates the largest and most-comprehensive subject guide to periodical literature. CBCA Fulltext allows searching on Windows, Macintosh, DOS and UNIX platforms.

CBCA OnDisc

CBCA OnDisc is the Knight Ridder CD-ROM version of the Canadian Index, giving you access to ten years of indexing. It includes every citation in the Canadian Index, plus thousands of informative abstracts which do not appear in the print edition.

KIOSK: Maclean's

Published in cooperation with Maclean's magazine, KIOSK: Maclean's contains every article and news report published by Canada's Weekly Newsmagazine over an eight year period.

CNI Clips: Press Clippings on Microfiche

CNI Clips is a unique service which provides the full text of more than 40,000 Canadian Press news stories and feature articles each year, and is delivered in a practical and economical microfiche format.

Canadian Education Index

Canadian Education Index covers more than 200 Canadian education periodicals, as well as reports and monographs from the educational research community across Canada. In addition, the Index covers report literature from government agencies, educational faculties and teachers' associations, and large school boards.

Canadian Education Index Thesaurus

Canadian Education Index Thesaurus is a bilingual controlled vocabulary of over 5,000 terms, developed for the indexing and retrieval of French or English-language material in Canadian education, and is an invaluable research aid for users of the Canadian Education Index.
